Helen, with a hasty farewell to her train companion, hurried down the aisle and a moment later was standing on the Springfield platform. Warren had said he would meet her if he could, and she looked hastily around in the hopes of seeing him hurry out of the crowd to welcome her. Somehow the warm little glow of satisfaction that she had experienced on the train had given place to a feeling of effort to meet her if he had tried.

She stifled this feeling as soon as she realized it, however. Warren did not deserve it. "Wasn't this a bust?" she thought. "I was making pleasant for her? How could she be so ungrateful?"

"Take a taxi up to the hotel, Warren had said, but in the hurry and excitement of getting off Helen had left the letter home on her dressing table and for the life of her she could not remember the name of the hotel Warren had mentioned. She hurried over the tracks and through the station to the row of taxis on the other side.

"I want to go to the best hotel," she told the man who jumped down and took her bag.

They stopped beside a place on the main street and Helen got out and paid the man. She did not think at the time or she might have told him to wait while she found out if Warren was staying there. As it was she followed the boy into the hotel and up to the registry desk. He waited expectantly for her to register, and for the first time Helen realized that she hardly knew what to do.

"Have you a Mr. Curtis stopping here?" she asked the clerk who looked at her closely.

"Mr. Curtis asked me to tell you to wait for him upstairs or down here, whichever you prefer," said the hotel clerk as Helen signed. "He will be in directly. Would you like to go to your room now? The ladies' parlor and writing rooms are on the mezzanine floor."

"Thank you, I will go to my room at once. Will you tell Mr. Curtis that I am here please, as soon as he comes in?"

"Certainly, madam, just follow the boy to the elevator."

As she went upstairs, Helen wondered if she ought to tell Warren about the mistake she had made. He would be sure to accuse her of carelessness if she did, and yet if she didn't tell him she would be lying. She would be sure to tell him anything. She writes two letters.

Warren's room was apparently one of the best and Helen tidied her hair under her hat and patted Warren's military brushes lovingly. Then she decided to go downstairs and write a letter while she waited. She would slip on her coat, and leave her gloves in the dresser. No, she would put them in her pocketbook and take that with her, it might not be safe to leave them in the room.

Down in the waiting room, Helen wrote two letters, one to Louise and one to her mother, and then deciding that Warren must have been detained longer than she had imagined strolled downstairs and mailed them. She was about to return to her room when she saw Warren stride up to the desk, and with a glad little cry she crossed to him and caught his arm impetuously.

He turned to greet her.

"Well, you got here all right, that's good. I meant to meet you but I couldn't get away. We had a conference this afternoon."

"I managed all right, dear; it wasn't any trouble. Are you glad to see me?"

"Glad, of course I'm glad. I'm tired though, been on the rush ever since I left home. You women have the easy times, all right, coming in on the good times with none of the bad thrown in."

Helen wanted to say that she would be glad to share the bad things with him, too, but she decided not to, as he might not understand.

"I know you must be tired, dear, you'll have a rest this evening, though and then you'll be all right again."

"That's just it; I may not be able to be with you this evening after all. There's some business that I have to attend to."

Helen could not help a little exclamation of disappointment.

"Now what's the matter? You know I'm up here for business, don't you? I have tickets for a play that is opening here to-night, and if I find I can't make it, I'll take you down and then join you later."

"But dear, I don't want to go to a play without you. I'll stay right here at the hotel and wait for you, if you have to be out."

"I tell you I have tickets; we don't want to throw them away; maybe I can manage it, too; I hope so. I have a few telephone calls to make before dinner and if I can fix it up over the phone everything will be all right."

They had reached the room and Helen was opening her traveling bag.

"I'll go down and telephone now," Helen said, and she was gone.

Warren sat in the room in silence. Don't bother to dress; people don't dress here any more than they do in New York, that's one thing to be thankful for."

As he left the room tears welled up to Helen's eyes. Warren had not kissed her. Of course they had been in the exchange when she had met him and Warren had had demonstrations in public, but he might have remembered after they had reached their room. Even if they did go to the theater, her little dream that she had woven all the way up was already broken. Then she had been very necessary, now she felt that she was absolutely taken for granted. Warren broke in on her thoughts with a sudden entrance.

"Well, I fixed it up all right, Kit-ten, now for a good dinner and a show. You haven't kissed me yet, either."

Helen slapped her arm around Warren's neck and gave him a little hug. Who said he wasn't the best husband in the whole world?

A NEW BASQUE

A Smart and Attractive Development of the Season's Favorite Model.

By MAY MANTON

8475 Basque with Sash Extensions, 34 to 42 bust.

This basque with kimono sleeves is one of the newest and prettiest. It is finished also with sash extensions and the ripple effect over the hips is very generally becoming. The collar that is high yet open at the front makes a novelty, also, and altogether the garment is one of the smartest possible. Long sleeves are favorites but there is no rule as to the length and either of those illustrated is correct. Basques of the kind are worn with skirts to match and also are made of different color or of different material from the skirt, as velvet over silk, or silk over wool or fancy material over plain, dark blue over black or black over blue.

For the medium size, the basque will require 5 yds. of material, 27 3/4 yds. 36, 3 3/4 yds. 44 in. wide.

The pattern 8475 is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 inches bust measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of 10 cents.

Miss Fairfax Answers Queries

THE BRIDEGROOM'S WEDDING EXPENSES.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am a young man and am to be married soon. I am ignorant as to the precise things I must pay for. Is it my place to pay for the wedding reception, the wedding cards, the bride's cake, the bride's bouquet, the carriages to the church, etc.?

I am a poor young man and starting in life with a wife; do not wish to go to any more expense than I can help to carry my wedding through successfully.

IGNORANT.

The bride's bouquet comes as a gift from the bridegroom. If he has ushers and best man he gives them some little remembrance. Apart from this the reading of the wedding invitation is carried out, and the mother and father of the bride, who have asked people to come to the ceremony, give the affair and defray its expenses.

YOU TOOK TOO MUCH FOR GRANTED.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: At a party I met a gentleman who had lately moved out a few times before. I spent most of the evening with him, but he did not ask me whether he might escort me home. Thinking that he would do so, I told another friend that I had an escort.

We all walked home together, I walking with this particular friend, and when we came to the corner of the street where I lived one girl said she was in a hurry to get home, and since the rest of the crowd went the same way, they left me on the corner. Don't you think that this particular man should have taken me to the home in which I live?

T. D. S.

You should have accepted the offer of the young man who was gallant enough to wish to take you home—However that does not alter the fact that no chivalrous or even decently courteous man ought to let a girl go home unaccompanied. Don't ask for an explanation—there is none—but drop the boy who treated you so.

A SAD CASE.

DEAR MISS FAIRFAX: I am a girl of sixteen and live in a small town. But I am unhappy because my mother always picks at me. What would you advise me to do? Shall I leave home, although I have no place to go? I am afraid I couldn't get along in the city. Kindly advise me what to do?

AN UNHAPPY GIRL.

My dear child, don't leave home for the city offers dangers and perils and sorrows that will be harder to bear than any hard words. Are you sure you are in no way to blame—that you do not worry or vex her or treat her with insolence? Can't you have a talk with your father and tell him that your mother is making you desperate and will drive you from home unless he can find a way of helping you to stop it?

On Curing Superfluous Hair

To the Beauty Editor: "Please advise me if there is anything that will permanently kill a very bad case of superfluous hair that has become stiff and coarse by repeated failures to find a real cure."

Mrs. H. H. W.

The only prescription I know of for completely removing every trace of superfluous hair is Mrs. Osgood's Wonderful after a well-known society woman who found that it removed permanently her own unsightly hair growth. It is absolutely harmless and inexpensive.

You can obtain Mrs. Osgood's Wonder from Kennedy's Drug Store, a signed Money-Back Guarantee comes in every package. Other druggists also sell it. Do not apply this prescription except to hair you wish totally destroyed never to return.—Advertisement.

An Old Holiday Custom

Surprise your friends this Christmas Holiday by reviving the old custom of serving apples to your friends.

It's no wonder this fashion died out when one considers the kind of apples that are usually to be had this season of the year.

But with large juicy apples such as Stayman Winesaps you can consider it a special privilege to be able to supply your guests.

All hand-picked selected apples.

There is something about Stayman Winesap Apples that is different. You cannot explain it, but when you eat one you immediately have an appetite for another.

Price of this famous apple, 70c per basket.

We will deliver them for you.

Do Not Over Indulge in Candy, Says Dixon

State Health Commissioner Is Out in Warning to Lovers of Sweets

Dr. Samuel G. Dixon, State Commissioner of Health, is out with a warning against over indulgence in candy during the holidays and especially against the use of cheap candies. The commissioner's statement is as follows:

Along with Santa Claus' other provisions is usually a generous store of sweets. No matter how many dolls and drums and other things may have been requested by the younger members of the family, they take it for granted that there will be candy.

Much of the indigestion and consequent distress which follows the holiday feasting is due to the excessive use of candy by both young and old. Of course the principal constituent of candy is sugar. Sugar is a food and one that is necessary to the human body. It produces heat and energy but when taken in excess it undergoes fermentation in the digestive tract and gives rise to various disturbances in the stomach and intestines. Not only this but it overburdens the liver with evil results.

If the children and grownups are to have candy it should be eaten with or immediately after the meals. The usual custom is to have sweets within everybody's reach and to stuff them between meals.

To properly carry on their functions the stomach and intestinal tract require a certain degree of rest. This is the reason that it is much better to eat at regular hours. When candy is eaten between meals it means that the digestive organs must be continually at work. As a result, instead of exercising their functions during the usual portion of the twenty-four hours, they are overworked and it is not surprising when they rebel from exhaustion, particularly on these feast days when the consumption of food is apt to be excessive.

Pure candies are not harmful if they are taken in reasonable quantities. Unfortunately there is an enormous amount of cheap candy sold throughout the country, which is grossly adulterated. Much of this is colored with coal tar dye to make it attractive to the eye of youth.

Following the holiday season there is always a notable increase in illnesses which are traceable to disturbances of the digestive system and there is likewise a perceptible increase in the mortality from these causes. There is little doubt but that the overfeeding and the excessive use of sweets which does not permit the rational rest of the digestive organs and so reduces the general resistance of the entire system, is the cause.

MEMBER OF HIGH SCHOOL FACULTY
Special to The Telegraph
Annville, Pa., Dec. 22.—Roger B. Saylor, of this town, a teacher in chemistry at Columbia University,

New York, has been elected a member of the Reading Boys' High School faculty to succeed Levi Mengel, who continues as director of the art gallery and museum. Mr. Saylor is appointed at an annual salary of $1,250. He was graduated from Lebanon Valley College, receiving the degree of Bachelor of Arts in 1911. After a two-year course at Columbia University he received the degree of Master of Arts. He is 22 years old.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.
