RAILROAD NEWS

FOUR BOSSES WHO GREW UP WITH ENOLA

Every railroad company must have competent men in charge of the important branches. Capable men, it is said, are responsible for the success of the Enola yards. Among the leaders of the Enola working forces pictured above are, reading from left right: J. Marshall O'Donnell, and John L. Hutter, assistant foreman; and H. G. Hassler, foreman of the car shops. These men will be on the program at the big celebration Friday night.

FOREMEN AT ENOLA TO HELP CELEBRATE

To Tell Interesting Facts About the World's Largest Engine-house; Prominent Speakers

Men who have been employed on the Pennsylvania Railroad Company since they were boys, will take a prominent part at the tenth anniversary celebration at Enola, Friday night. Many of these long service men are still active.

In charge of the enginehouse at Enola is J. Augustus Ringland. To be foreman of the largest enginehouse in the world is a credit to Mr. Ringland's ability. He has been in charge since the yards were opened. He is chairman of the invitation committee, and through his efforts many prominent officials will be on hand to help celebrate.

Associated with Foreman Ringland are two well-known employees who started with the company while boys. One is J. Marshall O'Donnell, assistant foreman, who was transferred from Marysville and is in charge at night; and the other is John L. Hutter, of Harrisburg. Both of these young men have won much prominence in the discharge of their duties.

In charge of the big car repair shops at Enola is H. G. Hassler. Under this foreman an army of men work. In addition to being in charge of the music Foreman Hassler will tell some interesting facts about the shops at Enola.

For the musical features, four of Harrisburg's best known vocalists have been secured. They are Mrs. William K. Brumbaugh, Miss Belle Middaugh, Stanley Backenstoss and Mrs. Harman. The Enola quartet will also sing. The speakers will include the Honorable S. J. M. McCarrell, associate law judge of Dauphin county; William J. Talcott, superintendent of the Philadelphia division; and Charles H. Andrus, master mechanic of the shops and enginehouses at Harrisburg and Enola.
