Washington, Jan. 30.—Locked in the most spectacular legislative battle the halls of Congress have seen since the celebrated fight on the Cannon rules, Senate Democrats and Republicans were arrayed to-day in the final stages of a historic contest over the administration ship bill.

After an all night session in which Senator Smoot had led the Republican filibuster by speaking continuously for eleven hours and thirty-five minutes and the Democratic parliamentary sharps kept a vigil in vain for the opportunity to drop the gavel and order a roll call, fresh Republican forces trooped into the chamber early to-day and Senator Sutherland took up the fight.

Senators of both parties, called from beds and banquets, had held the battle line all night, two little armies uniformed in full dress suits. Through the long hours while Senator Smoot held the floor without signs of fatigue until the daylight came streaming down through the glass top of the Senate chamber, the reserves of both sides snatched naps in the cloakrooms, on sofas in the chamber or at their desks. An array of drooping-eyed senators, with rumpled clothing and crumpled linen held their lines until fresh forces relieved them.
