COPYRIGHT, 1914, BY JOHN PLEMING WILSON

"Gallon and I were partners years the walls of the gulch ago," Wilkerson insisted. "We located this mine tegether, and when I came back he gave me over my share."

"But you want it all," the sheriff said dubiously.

"Sure; it's all mine," persisted the other. "Didn't Gallon use all the moner he got out of it while I was away? And when we came to a settlement he found that the mine wouldn't pay half

"Ruth oughtn't to be here."

Mexicans were getting restless, and the sardonic Vigas hinted sharply that he was impatient.
"All right," Wilkerson agreed. "We'll just go down to the road in the morning and then walk into the camp. Leave it to me. I'll simply say I've come back to take charge and you are my miners.'

Vigas twirled his wiry mustaches. 'And then?" The men looked each other in the eve. That evil glance was sufficient. John Dorr and Tom Kane, mean-while, had been in constant consultation. One thing was constantly in their will sneak something across if they "Ruth oughtn't to be here," John would say dismaily. "If it weren't for her we could quickly settle these out But when Kane had gone Dorr re-out of the question. Unless they start it." he added cautiously. "Wilkerson is bound to make some kind of a move mighty soon," said

Dorr. "He can't satisfy those fellows of his for long." Yet when Wilkerson appeared at the entrance to the camp one morning with a motley train of followers Dorr was at a loss to know what to do.

Wilkerson was apparently peaceful and expected a peaceful reception. His boldness had almost carried him through when the ignorance and cu-pidity of one of Vigas' men gave John and Kane the sorely wished for opening.

The Mexican peered into the window of one of the cabins and saw a gold watch on the table. Instantly he broke the glass with the butt of his carbine and reached in for his booty. Dorr and Kane had warned the miners at the first appearance of Wilkerson that there might be trouble brew ing, but that the first blow must come from the other side.

"Boys," said the old cook, "you know the sheriff. He's listened to both sides, and he don't rightly know which is the one to take. But one thing is certain—he's got to keep order and protect human life and our prop-If those fellows make a wrong move we've got the sheriff on our side

They had seen the point, with many mutterings. They had quietly prepar ed themselves for just the occasion which the Mexican's act now gave. As the bandit pulled his arm back with

The miners had the advantage. They fought from the shelter of their own cabins, and they were united by a common purpose. Their attackers were scattered, were divided between lust for loot and thirst for blood and no sure refuge nor rendezvous. Yet they would eventually have made the camp untenable had not the thoughtful sheriff prepared a surprise for both parties.

After consultation with his advisers in the county seat he had appealed to own terms. He directed several of his men to make a detour around the hill and effect this. Meanwhile he set fire to a cabin below in order to distract the attention of Dorr and his men.

The ruse had nearly succeeded but for Kane's quickness. Though he had not used his gun for many years, he had lost none of his old time skill, and when the marauders made their final dash on the porch of the house the cook, with a single glance over his shoulder, shot from the hip. His man tumbled dead at Ruth's feet, and his companions sneaked back.

At that instant the cavalry rushed in, and before five minutes were passed their commander had separated the combatants and proceeded to disarm to him and curtly stated that his or-ders were to see that there was no trouble. "What your quarrel is I don't know," he said. Wilkerson tried to argue, but neither the officer nor the sheriff, who now arrived, would listen to him. They also turned a deaf ear to John Dorr's statement of Wilkerson's crimes, including the kidnaping of Ruth in San Fran-

With this John must perforce be satisfied, but after a conference with Kane it was agreed that the latter should go to the county seat and make formal complaint and procure a warrant for Wilkerson's arrest on the ground of forgery.

"You and I know those deeds he flourishes aren't genuine," John said earnestly. "Let's make it an issue and try it in court. At any rate, we'll be rid of him for awhile.'

"I know you're right," the old cook assented heartily. "I'll be off today. With these troopers around the greas ers won't dare do anything openly But keep your eyes open. John! They "Trust me for that," was the ress-

In the county seat he had appealed to the governor on the ground that as one of the opposing forces was Mexican be feit that a superior authority should handle so delicate a situation. The governor had agreed and ordered a troop of cavalry to the "Master Key" to preserve order. It was just when Wilkerson had seen his chance for a grand coup that the troopers arrived. Ruth, with some of the women, had taken refuge in John's house on the hill, with old Tom Kane as their body guard. Wilkerson knew that if he could capture Ruth he could make his own terms.
