Motherhood One Great Passion of Women

By DOROTHY DIX
The artist has drawn for you on this page a tender and suggestive picture showing how, from the cradle to the grave, motherhood is the one great passion of women.

We have first the little girl, herself a mere baby, cuddling her doll through sheer instinct of maternity. Just as you have watched your own little girl dote on her Christmas dollie—nature preparing her for the little ones that long years hence she is to sing and croon over.

Next is the woman to whom her husband, larger than she is, older than she is, perhaps twice as wise as she is, is still her biggest baby to be petted and fussed over, and spoiled and scolded, always her baby dependent on her, no matter how great and strong he is to the balance of the world.

Last, we have the old woman, who has mothered so many babies that the crooks of her arms form a cradle of themselves, holding to her withered breast her grandchild, her face lit up by that radiance of softness and gentleness that makes the homeliest woman beautiful when she looks at a baby.

This great maternal passion is the most wonderful thing in nature. It is not only a power to women the strength and courage to hand on the torch of life from generation to generation without counting the cost to themselves in suffering and death, but it is what gives to women the patience and the love to bear with the infirmities and the weaknesses of humanity.

If it were not for this glory of mother love through which a woman sees her own children transfigured babies would die like flies. It is only a mother who can hang with tireless devotion over the cradle of a sickly, fretting infant, grotesquely ugly, with its too big head hanging from a wobbly neck, and see in it something for which it is worth while to sacrifice every comfort and pleasure. Yet such children as these—children that any hireling would let die—have grown up to be the very flower of manhood and womanhood, that are the mothers who saved them at their own expense.

It is this passion of motherhood that enables a woman to see beauty in her scrawny and frail baby and literally mother it, back into health that also enables her to be blind to the moral deformities of her child, and to behold virtues in it where others see only vices. It is the knowledge that mother still believes in him, that mother has kept the lamp burning in the window for him, that has lighted the way to reform for many a prodigal. It is motherhood, with its inexhaustible love and its comforting arms that never fail, that has kept the world from despair, and made men believe that there must be a God since He made motherhood.

It is the motherhood of women that explains the strange phenomena we so often see in domestic life of a great-souled woman sacrificing herself to a weak and worthless man. It is often contemptuously said that the less worthy of love a man is the more some woman seem to care for him, and that no wives are so devoted and so faithful as those of drunkards. "Weakling Man Appeals to the Eternal Mother in Woman"

The reason of this is that the weakling man appeals to the eternal mother in the woman. Her love passes from that of the wife to that of the mother. The man ceases to be her husband, her mate, and becomes her child, her helpless, dependent baby, and she could no more throw her back upon him than she could leave her little babe alone to the cruel mercies of the world.

In her own soul she may despise the weakness of the man who cannot resist temptation. She may be filled with contempt for him who is so cowardly he lacks the grit and courage to stand up and fight his own battle of life. She may blush with shame for him who clings to a woman's skirts, but stronger than any of these is the instinct of nature to mother him just because he is weak and clinging and dependent. And it is a good thing for the strong man as well as the weak man that this is true of women, because the mother in them enables them to forgive to men many a fault and stumble that the wife would never forgive the husband, and that men never forgive to women.

Mothers Needed in Politics to Put an End to Child Labor
Those of us who believe in suffrage for women believe that the most valuable gift that women will bring to the service of their country, when they are permitted to serve it, is this passion of motherhood. We believe that we need mothers in politics, that the whole human race is crying to be mothered. We believe that when women have a vote there will be no more child labor; that the life of a baby will be thought to be as valuable as that of a pig, and that millions will not be spent for the conservation of the lives of animals and nothing for those of children.

Epigrams and Sayings

By ELLA WHEELER WILCOX
(Copyright, 1915, Star Company)
It may be true that whatever is choice is always exclusive; but whatever is exclusive is not always choice.

As malice creates malice, so often generosity arouses generosity.
The world is full of good-hearted yet short-sighted people who brand any man as an infidel whose ideas of divine worship differ from their own.

We warn our sons with loud voices against the dangers of the wine cup and the gaming table, but too many of us sit silent while our daughters contract habits of malicious speaking and envious criticism, which are quite as great evils in society to-day as intemperance or gambling.

Thoughtlessness is the consort of selfishness; and the two are parents of crime.
County Controller Gough Didn't Think Formal Resignation Necessary

"If I am officially asked to resign by the proper authorities who may consider that my failure to tender my resignation heretofore offers a legal obstruction to the selecting of successor as city controller, then I shall have no objection to formally severing my services with the city," said County Controller H. W. Gough to-day.
"However I always supposed that my service with the city as controller automatically ceased when I became county controller as I had believed the two elective offices incompatible. So, therefore, I didn't think it necessary to formally resign the city controllership."
