

THIRD EPISODE. June Finds Work.

CHAPTER I.

DOWN the dark boulevard from Brynport stowed and bumped and rattled a lone taxicab, with a high powered limousine steadily gaining on it.

"Perhaps I can offer your passengers the use of my machine," he suggested.

"Perhaps I can offer the use of my machine."

At Blye's club the limousine stopped, while the black Vandyked man alighted. June smiled as she bade him good night.

June stepped from the car with a sigh of relief. A home of any sort was welcome now.

by a thick thumbed waiter, who carried each course out into the hall and ate it himself, since Ned had scarcely touched it.

Bill Wolf, the fattest and widest of Honoria's detectives, later rang the Blye bell and bulked back to the dining room in excitement.

"My hat and coat!" she shrieked to the abnormally ugly maid.

June Hurried Down the Stairs.

"No, he ain't! Has he dared to go up to her room in my house?"
