Warren Takes Helen to the Opera and Nora Forgets to Send His Studs and Cuff Links

(Copyright, 1915, International News Service) The telephone rang insistently. Nora stuck her head into the living-room. Helen didn't seem to be there, so Nora ran to the telephone in the hall and took down the receiver. "Hello! Yes, Mr. Curtis. No, Mrs. Curtis is out. I guess she'll be in pretty soon," were her answers to Warren.

gown, but it always made her too pale looking, and her hair never showed to good advantage with it. A few days before she had bought a narrow band of rhinestones to put in her hair. The rose frock had a band of them near the neck, so this would follow out the idea. She still had plenty of time to dress, and have dinner. There was time for a short letter to her mother, and then to get ready.

Normal Birth Is Rarity; Abnormal One Common

Many Governments of Civilized World Alarmed at Decreasing Rate; Twilight Sleep Hailed as Means of Restoring It; Local Woman Physician Fears Effects of Scopolamin Upon Child

By Anna H. Wood

The ancient Hebrew philosophers knew nothing of the theory of evolution. They pronounced man a fallen angel. Hence the daughters of men, in expiation for the sins of their fathers, were expected to "bring forth children in sorrow." It was the duty of women, because God made them women, to suffer and pay the price. This idea became so interwoven with superstition and religious dogma that it was accepted as positive fact by generation after generation. Indeed, when the blessing of anaesthesia was first discovered there arose a great hue and cry from the clergy against its being used in obstetrical cases because it showed a direct contradiction to the Sacred Word! To-day we think ourselves humane and scoff at such narrow mindedness. Yet the governments of several of the most highly civilized countries in the world have become alarmed at their decreasing birth rates. The normal birth is becoming a rarity; the abnormal one a common occurrence. Blame it upon athletics, advanced civilization, Nature's method of thinking out the population or whatever cause you please. The fact remains and probably has much to do with the world-wide interest among women which the Twilight Sleep has aroused.

the public which was asked by Elisha of old, "Is it well with the child?" Just here is the crucial test of the Twilight Sleep method. Naturally the drugs used upon the mother before the birth have their effect upon the child also. Dr. William H. W. Knipe of New York, says that out of 101 cases under his care in the past six months, eighty-seven infants cried spontaneously upon their introduction to the world of men and showed no sign of poisoning either while in the hospitals or afterwards. But what of the other dozen little tots? Were they victims whose names shall be forgotten in the march of progress? There seems to be a consensus of opinion among the local physicians who have never attempted to use the Twilight Sleep in their own practice that the danger of suffocation to the babe is very great.
