

FALLS SIX FLOORS FIRST DAY ON JOB, AS LIKELY TO DIE

George Schwartz, 1514 Berryhill Street, Probably Fatally Injured at Pittsburgh

HURLED FROM SCAFFOLD Structural Workers Topped to Ground From High Building; Two Injured

Injured the first day after he got a job is the story of George Schwartz, 1514 Berryhill street, who left home Sunday night for Pittsburgh in search of work, and fell from the sixth story of the new William Penn hotel, where he was working with a crew of structural iron workers early this morning.

According to the dispatch from Pittsburgh Mr. Schwartz was one of four riveters—all experienced structural iron workers—who were working from a swinging scaffold on the sixth floor level, when it was struck by a huge load of lumber being elevated to the seventh floor by one of the cranes, hurling two men to the ground. Mr. Schwartz is said to be seriously injured from striking beams as he fell. The other man who fell was also injured. The remaining two narrowly escaped. At the home 1514 Berryhill street where his wife and son George live, it was learned that the father, who is 55 years old had left home Sunday night to hunt for work. They received a letter from him yesterday saying he had not yet obtained a job; and this morning came a dispatch telling of him being in a hospital, injured.

The armor on the Pennsylvania is heavier than on the Queen Elizabeth. The American ship can throw seven and one-half tons of metal 15,000 yards on either broadside. These shells can penetrate 12 inches of armor at that range.
