Ned had stepped back among the bushes with the hope of edging himself over to the wall before Marie could arrive. To his surprise, however, Marle, though she looked down in that direction, did not come. She called Bouncer, and together they went into house. Ned took adrantage of Marie's indifference and of Bouncer's confinement to slip closer and look in at the windows, front, side and rear. The lower floor was brightly illuminated, the front porch light being lit, as if some one were expected. June! Some instinct told Ned that she was coming. Ring to Urge the Administration Bills

Attorney General Francis Shunk Brown went into action in earnest yes-

Brown went into action in earnest yesterday afternoon in advocacy of Governor Brumbaugh's legislative program, the occasion for his official debut being the workmen's compensation bills.

The Attorney General's appearance on the "firing line" was under circumstances out of the ordinary and when he concluded his effort in behalf of what has been regarded as the major measure of the program perspiration was standing in beads upon his forehead. Mr. Brown disclaimed any "pride of opinion" with respect to the compensation bill which is in large part his handiwork. He urged the judiciary general committee of the House and the committee on corporations of the Senate to amend the measure as they saw fit, but to make a beginning in the matter of providing the State with an act of a kind upon the statute books of other common wealths.

a beginning in the matter of providing the State with an act of a kind upon the statute books of other commonwealths.

The State's law officer shattered several lances in tilts with representatives of corporate interests who protested with all the vigor at their command that the Governor's proposed compensation act would saddle upon the business of the Commonwealth an additional burden that would be difficult for them to bear. But the Attorney General characterized the fears of the spokesmen of business as a mirage that would vanish before the workings of the measure which he had drafted and which has upon it Governor Brumbaugh's endorsement. Several times the representatives of organized labor applauded the unusual spectacle of an Attorney General for the leading industrial State of the Union demanding that Pennsylvania take its place in the forerank of States that undertake to protect workmen against the accidents and fatalities incident to industrial life.

At one period of his defense of the Governor's compensation bill Attorney General Brown approximated William Jennings Bryan's "cross of gold and crown of thorns" effort, when, striking his breast with his clenched hand, the State's law officer asserted that the soft coal operators of the State could pay $3,000,000 annually in compensation at a cost of I cent per ton upon their output.

"I would not care to be a citizen of a Commonwealth," the Attorney General observed, "that nut so low an estimate upon human life and welfare as
