More English Pheasants For Breeding Purposes

Special to The Telegraph
Philadelphia, March 26.—Eighteen hundred ring-necked pheasants were brought to this port yesterday by the British steamship Cardinian, from Glasgow. The birds were consigned to the Pennsylvania Fish and Game Commissioners, and will be distributed throughout the State for breeding purposes. This is the second lot to arrive this week, the others coming on the British steamship Dominion. When the Sardinian arrived yesterday she had no name at either bow or stern. She also was painted a dull gray, to resemble a battleship. The vessel sailed from Glasgow March 8, and from Liverpool March 9. Just after leaving Liverpool she received a wireless notifying her that two British coasting steamships, the Princess Maude and the Kikone, had been sunk by German submarines. Until well out of the "war zone" the vessel extinguished all of her lights at night.
