

Women AND THEIR INTERESTS

"Their Married Life"

Helen closed her eyes lazily, conscious that she was very comfortable and that there was nothing to bother her.

Two women who had been strolling around the deck stopped near her and began to arrange the steamer chairs next.

Helen was now fully aroused, and was quite certain that she was the subject of conversation.

Helen sure now she is being dissembled. Helen was now fully aroused, and was quite certain that she was the subject of conversation.

"What makes you say that?" Helen asked. "Different things I have overheard. She doesn't dare assert herself—one of those meek, unassuming women you know, and just the kind a man tires of very soon."

"The little girl is sweet," said the other, but let me tell you, my dear, that what the father says goes.

"What makes you say that?" Helen asked. "Different things I have overheard. She doesn't dare assert herself—one of those meek, unassuming women you know, and just the kind a man tires of very soon."

"That's true. Still, they must have money," she said. "Don't talk so loud, dear; it would be awfully unpleasant if she should overhear anything."

"She's asleep. I was sure of that before we sat down."

"All right. Anyway, we haven't mentioned any names. I wonder where the steward went with the tea. I saw him downstairs about fifteen minutes ago."

The conversation drifted into different channels after that and Helen, the beautiful day all lost upon her, stirred and began to get out of her chair slowly, conscious that her cheeks were burning.

A book fell out of her lap as she stood up and she bent to pick it up. Then with the steamer rug over her arm, she made her way along the deck and downstairs to her room.

The words of those women were still ringing in her ears. She was the kind of a woman men soon tire of, meek and unassuming.

It was after a long time that Helen came back to her room. She was tired and her head ached. She had been thinking of the things she had heard and she was sure that she had been overheard.

"What makes you say that?" Helen asked. "Different things I have overheard. She doesn't dare assert herself—one of those meek, unassuming women you know, and just the kind a man tires of very soon."

RECEPTION PLANNED FOR NEW CHAMPION

Willard Retired Early Last Evening Following Sightseeing Trip With Friends

Havana, April 6.—The city of Havana was to-day resuming its customary aspect after the intrusion yesterday upon its normal life of the excitement and enthusiasm incidental to the passage of the world's heavyweight championship from Jack Johnson to Jess Willard.

The men most interested in the battle took little part in the general celebration last night. Willard spent the early evening sightseeing with friends from Kansas, after which he had dinner, and went early to bed.

Willard and his promoters and supporters will leave here Wednesday for Key West on the way north; Johnson, accompanied by his wife and some friends, expects to leave Havana the latter part of the week for the French island of Martinique, in the West Indies.

Curtis Guild, Former Massachusetts Governor, Dies at His Boston Home

Boston, April 6.—Curtis Guild, former governor of Massachusetts, and former ambassador to Russia, died early to-day at his home in Boston.

Curtis Guild was ambassador to Russia for two years during President Taft's administration and was three times governor of Massachusetts.

Think Cigaret Stumps Started Apartment Fire

The police are mystified as to the origin of a fire which broke out in a second floor apartment occupied by Philip Crawford, in the Bergstresser building at 436 Market street.

Crawford was not in his rooms last night when the fire started. When entrance was gained a bathrobe, flannel shirt and bed clothing near the door was burning.
