THIRTEENTH EPISODE

Trapped

CHAPTER I.

DRAPED as the Spirit of the Marsh, the beautiful runaway bride stood, dazed and trembling, on the sidewalk in front of the studio from which she had been driven. At the curb stood a limousine with its black silk curtains drawn. The white mustached man, who had sprung from it, grasped the lovely model by the wrist and drew her to the car as the dark, handsome, black Vandyke man who had followed covered her gaudily clad form with the voluminous black cloak which he carried.

Down the street at a tearing pace came the family car of the runaway bride's father and mother, and in it with them were two of her friends and the deserted groom, his teeth gritting and his fists clinched as he saw these two scoundrels bundle his pretty June into the car and hurry in after her.

Just behind the family came an electric coupe, driven by a sharp featured woman with a long nose and high arched brows, and as she saw this bold abduction she shrieked and ran her car into the curb. As the door of the luxurious limousine slammed shut the quiet block seemed suddenly alive. Around the corner of the studio came bounding a handsome colie, which ran to the car, loudly barking. A woman with high cheek bones and accompanied by a tall policeman followed the dog. She dashed up to the limousine as it started and jumped upon the running board, while the dog barked and leaped.

From a doorway on the opposite side of the street there sprang a short, wide man with a thick stub of a cigar in his mouth, who pursued the limousine, hopped upon the spare tires at the back of the car and hung there. The woman on the running board opened the door of the limousine and forced her way in as they dashed around the corner, furiously pursued by the family car, the electric coupe and the barking colie.

The luxurious limousine was speedier than its pursuers, but not speedy enough entirely to lose the family car with the deserted groom. It had gained several blocks' headway, however, when it turned a corner and stopped abruptly in front of a house where a vivacious brunette and a large blond woman stood peering eagerly out of the window. Only for an instant it paused. The door opened. Out of it sprang the white mustached man and drew after him the half fainting girl in the voluminous black cloak. He put his arm around her and hurriedly forced her up the steps. The woman with the high cheek bones darted after her. She hesitated a moment and vaguely recognized the cloak; then she sprang after the beautiful young girl.

The man with the black Vandyke caught her by the arm and held her back. He spoke sharply to the driver, who was the treacherous Scotti, and the limousine jerked forward just as the door of the house opened and the beautiful girl was thrust inside.

The thick, wide man on behind struggled to get down from his uncomfortable position, but his cravat was caught in the strap of the tire covers, and so the well known and justly famous private detective, Bill Wolf, stooped over the tires, with his wide feet in the rack, his arms around the rims and his head held down, was carried swiftly away hurried up the steps and let himself in with a latchkey, while the woman ran down to the basement door and pushed past the servant who opened it.

At that moment the family car swerved around the corner and flashed by, still pursuing the luxurious limousine. It had lost this scene of alighting through having stopped long enough to take on the handsome colie, which now sat on the front seat with the driver. There was no mistaking that luxurious limousine, with its black curtains tightly drawn and a bit of filmy gauze fluttering from the door and the faithful Bill Wolf still stooped on behind.

So it was that beautiful June Warner came into the boarding house of Mrs. Russel.

June was ushered into the parlor, where several of Mrs. Russel's guests were seated. All were impressed by the beauty of the girl as she was introduced to them. A young man suggested to one of the three young ladies present that they play a game of cards.

June stood before her new acquaintances hesitatingly. She did not know who they were, and yet she did not desire to offend them. Her chief thought was to get her clothes and try to procure some work that would provide for her expenses.

And as she paused at entering the card game the door to the parlor suddenly opened, and in came Orin Cunningham.

In Mrs. Russel's select boarding house was now a strange combination of people. These were Gilbert Blye, the maid, Marie; Orin Cunningham and June, the runaway bride.

CHAPTER II.
FAR out on Broadway the luxurious limousine, with the black curtains drawn and the bit of filmy gauze fluttering from the door, turned toward the river, with the faithful Bill Wolf still stooped over the tires, his cravat still firmly clutched in the strap of the tire cover and his emurpled face turned partly up, so that the corner of one pink eye could gaze back imploringly at the pursuing car.

In that car, strained tensely forward, Ned Warner sat with gritted teeth and clinched hands, never removing his eyes from the fleeing limousine into which he had seen his lovely runaway bride bundled by the scoundrelly Gilbert Blye. Again he urged the driver, Jerry, to greater speed. He was determined that this time the chase should not end until he had his fingers clutched around the throat of that dark, handsome man with the black Vandyke and had strangled him to death. He had wrecked Ned's life, this dastardly Blye, and nothing but a life would pay. On the very day of Ned's marriage the fellow's evil machinations had begun.

The black curtained limousine just ahead wheeled around the corner and dashed up the hill at high speed, with the faithful Bill Wolf wabbling on behind like a Japanese balloon.

As Cunningham entered, June, afraid, called for Gilbert Blye, and he came hurrying into the room, a scowl upon his dark, handsome face. Gilbert Blye pointed sternly to the door, and Cunningham, after a moment of sullen hesitation, affected to treat the matter lightly and swaggered from the room, twirling his white mustache. At the door he turned and cast upon June a malevolent glare.

The boarders looked on in surprise. "Please! Please, Mr. Blye!" begged June.

Come! His low voice soothed her. "You must lie down and rest for a few moments, and I promise that no one shall disturb you." He led her to a room. She turned up her pleading eyes to him, and he smiled down at her. He covered her with the folds of the voluminous black coat. "I shall return in ten minutes," he said.

In the basement Marie stood with Gilbert Blye's money in her hand. She started for the door. She came back and started for the stairs. She turned again to the door, again to the stairs, then stood and looked at Gilbert Blye's money, her high cheek bones white and indecision on her brow.

Up hill and downhill rushed the black curtained limousine with the Moore family car still in hot pursuit.

Occasionally the well known and justly famous private detective, Bill Wolf, loosened his clutch for an instant, but right— it immediately

Robbed by Highwaymen
Special to The Telegraph
Sunbury, Pa., April 19.—A middle-aged man, who said he was Miles Martee, of Berwick, Pa., a traveling man, staggered into a hotel here last night a mass of blood and with blood streaming from a wound in the head. He declared he was walking along the street when he was attacked from behind by highwaymen and robbed of his $35 gold watch and $70 in money. He was sent to the Mary M. Packer Hospital. He is much better to-day but can give no idea as to the identity of his alleged assailants.

Bad Eggs Sold
Special to The Telegraph
Sunbury, Pa., April 19.—Hundreds of spoiled eggs, it is alleged, have been bought during the past few days in the Sunbury markets and the consumers are up in arms over it. They declare that infertile eggs are bought up from men who run large chicken farms and are palmed off on the people as fresh eggs at the full price. The police here have been asked to investigate.

$2,400 FOR NOXIOUS ANIMALS
Special to The Telegraph
Sunbury, Pa., April 19.—According to the records in the office of the Northumberland county commissioners at Sunbury, $2,400 was paid out last year for bounties on noxious animals. Weasels are the most numerous, more than 600 of them having been killed.

NEW REPORT FILED
Special to The Telegraph
Sunbury, Pa., April 19.—Aaron Raker, Shamokin, Northumberland county controller, to-day presented his first annual report to the court for approval. It was his second statement, the first having been too insufficient to satisfy Judges Cummings and Moser, and they directed that he prepare and file a new report, telling him the first was "bungled." The new document contains more than 100 pages.

Yours Baby Should Gain Four to Eight Ounces Each Week
If the baby gets plenty of air and the little body is straight and well-formed—and yet he does not gain that much each week—the food is probably wrong. Perhaps your own milk is not enough. Nurse your baby as long as you can—but when he stops gaining at least four ounces each week—try substituting one or two feedings a day of Nestlé's Food

Begin with the six o'clock evening feeding—the hour when your own milk is likely to be scant. Give a bottle of Nestlé's then. If he sleeps calmly until his next feeding is due—you'll know that Nestlé's has satisfied the needs of his little bit of body; that it will add muscle and bone and blood—bit by bit to make a big healthy boy or girl.

Don't risk cow's milk. Cow's milk is all right for calves (they have four stomachs to digest it) but it's too heavy for the one delicate stomach of a baby. And cow's milk may carry danger-germs from unclean dairies—consumption—sudden epidemics like the foot and mouth disease of last year.

The best cow's milk is the basis of Nestlé's Food—milk from clean, healthy cows in sanitary dairies, carefully inspected. To it are added the food elements that cow's milk does not contain, and that baby needs.

Packed in air-tight cans, Nestlé's reaches you pure and safe. You add only fresh water to make it ready. Send the coupon for a sample box of Nestlé's and our book on "Better Babies"—FREE.
