What we do to have your gloves absolutely perfect

One girl, the first Kayser's inspector, is paid 1/2 cent should she find a blemish in our silk fabric when it is cut ready to seam.

The second is paid 1 cent a pair should she find a flaw after the glove is seamed.

The next inspector gets 1 1/2 cents a pair if she detects an imperfection.

The fourth and final—the supervisor—receives 2 cents a pair if she discovers the slightest defect.

This is the care we take to have your silk gloves absolutely perfect. This is why we can guarantee every one of the millions of Kayser Silk Gloves which American women wear each season.

AMUSEMENTS

MAJESTIC To-morrow, afternoon and evening—McIntyre and Heath in "The Ham Tree." Thursday, afternoon and evening, April 23—Harrisburg Choral Society and Russian Symphony Orchestra. Friday, afternoon and evening, April 30—"Twin Beds."

COLONIAL Every afternoon and evening—Vaudeville and Pictures.

MOVING PICTURES Palace, 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. Photoplay, 10 a. m. to 11 p. m. Regent, 12 noon to 11 p. m. Royal, 6 p. m. to 11 p. m. Victoria, 10 a. m. to 11 p. m.

McINTYRE AND HEATH IN "THE HAM TREE" McIntyre and Heath, acknowledged the two most legitimately humorous men on the stage in the delineation of Southern negro types, will be the attraction at the Majestic to-morrow, afternoon and evening, in an elaborate revival of their greatest comedy success, "The Ham Tree," under the management of John Cort. "The Ham Tree" is by George V. Hobart and Jean Schwartz, and this season's presentation of the musical novelty has been fully revised and brought up-to-date. The production is staged by Ned Wayburn.—Advertisement.

"TWIN BEDS" RETURN Jane Seymour, who plays Amanda Davis in Selwyn and Co.'s production of "Twin Beds," which is coming to the Majestic for a return engagement Friday, matinee and night, declares she has not a jealous hair in her head, and yet she plays the role of a suspicious sister of uncertain age to the manner born. When she discovers her fiancé, Andrew Larkin, holding the name of pretty Mrs. Hawkins, on whose finger he has just tried a wedding ring, which is too small, Miss Seymour's jealous rage is a fine bit of acting and so realistic as to cause some of the male portion of the audience to shiver with apprehension.—Advertisement.

THE PHOTOPLAY TO-DAY Two big stars, Howard Estabrook and Barbara Tennant, will make their appearance at the Regent Theater today in "M'Liss," produced from the story of Bret Harte. The play is a Shubert feature and tells the story of a young girl, Melissa Smith, whose father committed suicide when his gold claim, Smith's Pocket, failed to produce properly. "M'Liss" is cared for by relatives on Red Mountain, Nevada, is sent to school, and falls in love with the schoolmaster, Gray. A strange man secretly installs himself at Smith's Pocket and makes the mine yield gold. Other events follow in rapid succession and the play is finally brought to a happy ending. To-morrow's attraction will be a four-reel playlet, "C. O. D.," in addition to the regular program.—Advertisement.

"THE LITTLE STRAW WIFE" AT THE PHOTOPLAY TO-DAY Famous serial story, "The Little Straw Wife," which appeared recently in the Ladies' World Magazine, has been adapted to Motion Pictures by the Essanay Company and produced in three acts. Miss Edna Mayo, popular star, and Bryant Washburn have the leading roles. Our regular Friday railroad story with fearless Helen Holmes in the lead, is also shown today. "The Girl on the Trestle," a single reel tale.—Advertisement.

Helen rounded a corner of the windy deck to find Warren looking eagerly at the shore, which was rapidly coming nearer and nearer. "Isn't it great, dear?" she remarked, hurrying over to him. "Great to be getting back to work? Not so very. I thought you were so crazy to get away from New York."

"I was, dear, but I'm always glad to get back." "So am I," said Warren, contentedly, "but I didn't know you were so at it so reasonably. Sure you won't go right off somewhere on a visit?" "Not for ages," promised Helen, snuggling her cheek affectionately against his.

Warren did not look displeased, although as a general rule he disliked demonstrations of any kind, particularly in public, and Helen looked up almost in surprise that he did not reprove her for her foolishness. "Where's Winifred?" he remarked a moment later. "Let her go down in the stateroom with the little Langly children. They seem to be playing very happily. The nurse is with them."

"All nonsense having a nurse for children that age," Warren remarked. "Oh, but, Warren, they have plenty of money. Why not? It simply means that Mrs. Langly can have more freedom." "Do you want more freedom? Would you like a nurse for Winifred?" he asked, turning to her abruptly. "No, dear, how silly! I meant that if they wanted to spend their money that way it was their own business. They might be spending it a great deal worse, too."

Warren did not answer, and they gazed off toward the shore again. "Everything packed?" he said after a few moments. "Everything," she responded, proudly, "and out on deck. I thought you'd like to see it."

Everything Ready to Go on Shore Again Helen was wearing the trim suit and hat that she had left New York in, and Warren took her in for a few moments. "It must be the deuce to live in a hot country always," he remarked. "You look a darned sight better than you did down there, I can tell you."

"I thought I looked pretty nice anyway," she said, teasingly. A year back Helen would have responded in the affirmative, now she had overcome her timidity and was beginning to assert herself occasionally. She never knew what Warren really thought of these bursts of hers, but she shrewdly suspected that he hardly made them.

After a few minutes Helen went down to get Winifred ready and to put the last few little things in her handbag. It hardly seemed possible that they had been gone any time at all, and as she went up on deck again she met Warren coming down. "We'll be in in a couple of minutes," he said. "Don't bother to go up; I'll get the bags."

Helen went on the lower deck, but it was so crowded that she decided to wait for Warren inside. Afterward it all seemed a dream to her, the docking of the big ship and the sea of faces on the wharf. "I wait someone were going to meet us," said Helen, a little wistfully, as they stood with the others waiting for the gangplank to be put down. "I don't," said Warren, crossly. "You women always want a lot of fuss made over you."

"Oh, it's not that; it's just the thought that some one cares, dear," and Helen looked at him with a little smile that made his face change suddenly. "Well, here we are," he remarked in a matter-of-fact way, and they walked down the gangplank with the crowd, and a second later were standing on the crowded wharf. Helen looked around a little bewilderedly. She hated crowds, and held Winifred's small gloved hand in her own tightly. Warren was bustling them along, piloting them skilfully through the jam, and Helen a moment later was seized by some one from behind and kissed impulsively.

Helen Finds Her Mother on Hand She turned, and then her amazement could find no words. "Mother," she gasped, "mother, where did you come from?" Winifred was dancing up and down, singing happily that her grandma had come, and Warren was smiling even more curiously. Helen with her arms around her mother's neck was oblivious to everyone and everything. She had never known of anything more wonderful than this thing that had happened to her so unexpectedly.

"Well, we might as well get out of the crowd," said Warren after a few moments, and at that Helen turned to him. "You did this, didn't you, Warren, you knew all the time that mother would be here to meet us?" Warren nodded sheepishly. "I thought you'd like it, so I wrote her when we first got down there."

"And I didn't know whether I could leave home just now, but your father insisted and here I am." "I should say you are," said Helen. "I'll never get over it, never! Warren, you old dear," she stopped, her eyes shining. And Warren, with his eyes turned in another direction, said boyishly: "Well, come on, we can't stand here all day," and with a sudden air of recklessness bundled them all into a taxi.

"How extravagant, dear," said Helen, extrajipping her hand into his as he sat down beside her. "I guess we can stand it for once. This occasion certainly ought to be celebrated in some way."

Little Boy Bleeds to Death From Biting His Tongue

York Haven, Pa., April 23.—Carl, the 2-year-old son of Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Gray, of Pleasant Grove, near York Haven, died to death as a result of biting his tongue, ten days ago. Physicians were unable to stop the flow of blood, death occurring Tuesday morning. When the child bit his tongue the wound bled for several days. The flow of blood then abated for a brief interval, but began last Thursday, when the child either bit himself again or the old wound resumed its flow. Several physicians were summoned and the child was taken on Saturday to the York hospital for treatment. The wound on his tongue was scarcely visible, being the size of a pin head. This is the eleventh of a family of fifteen children that died in the Gray household.

The New Baby is World's Wonder

Every tiny infant makes life's perspective wider and brighter. And whatever there is to enhance its arrival and to ease and comfort the expectant mother should be given attention. Among the most helpful things is an external abdominal application known as "Mother's Friend." There is scarcely a community but what has its enthusiastic admirers of this splendid embrocation. It is so well thought of by women who know that most drug stores throughout the United States carry "Mother's Friend" as one of their staple and reliable remedies. It is applied to the abdominal muscles to relieve the strain on ligaments and tendons. Those who have used it refer to the ease and comfort experienced during the period of expectancy; they particularly refer to the absence of nausea, often so prevalent as a result of the natural expansion. A little book are described more fully the many reasons why "Mother's Friend" has been a friend indeed to women with timely hints, suggestions and helps for ready reference. It should be in all homes. "Mother's Friend" may be had of almost any druggist, but if you fail to find it in your neighborhood write for book to Bradford Regulator Co., 408 Lamar Bldg., Atlanta, Ga.

A PRACTICAL APRON A Useful Little Garment that Can be Made With or Without Sleeves.

By MAY MANTON

8594 Girl's Apron, 8 to 14 years.

Little girls are sure to need practical aprons, for there will be times when they will wish to indulge in occupations that mean soil and frocks must be protected. This one can be made absolutely plain and serviceable, with long sleeves and pockets, or more elaborate and dainty by being cut with square neck and made without sleeves and without the pockets. For the former treatment, the gingham and percales make the best materials, but for the sleeveless model, any dainty apron material such as crossbarred plain or embroidered muslin is liked. There are only three pieces, plain front and plain backs, and the long sleeves are gathered at the shoulders and again at the wrists. For the cooking school or for any similar occasion, the apron shown on the figure is really perfect. The sleeveless apron with square neck is dainty and charming for school and other occasions. For the 12 year size will be required 4 3/4 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 3 yds. 3/4 yd. 27, for collar and trimming. The pattern No. 8594 is cut in sizes from 8 to 14 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.
