Runaway June

By George Randolph Chester and Lillian Chester.

She gathered up the money with a sickening sense of humiliation and took the ticket he gave her and walked out, feeling that she had been badly worsted, because she had no heart for this sort of bartering. It dawned upon her that there were worse humiliations than accepting money from one's husband, and yet— She conquered the weakness which sprang fiercely up in her, which made her heart cry in anguish for Ned, which made her long to desert all this hideous struggle and fly to his sheltering arms. No; she must fight to the end!

But what was she to do next? A sign at the foot of a dark, narrow stairway caught her eye:

"Girls Wanted to Sew Pants." Labor. Honest toll. Slight as might be the pay, was it not better, after all, than the occupations in which she had suffered so much? Timorously June climbed the stairs, stopping at the first landing for a recurrence of that slight cough which had come upon her.

An impossibly dirty man stood behind a long table on which were piled huge bundles tied in rough paper.

"Well?" he said gruffly.

"I would like to sew some pants, if you please," said June modestly.

"What?" The man looked at her, astounded. "You want to sew pants?"

"Yes, sir," returned June.

The man shrugged his shoulders.

"You go over to that woman there, and she'll show you what's to be done and how much deposit to pay." He indicated another table.

When June went down the narrow stairs she carried as heavy a bundle as she could conveniently lift, and her scanty store of money was reduced to a very small margin. Little as it was, however, she had yet to make a purchase. In the first little store she bought an inexpensive little plain black dress. She had less than a dollar when she stopped before a building to which she had been directed. On the doorstep of the stairway was a sign.

"Rooms to Let."

June here engaged a mean little hall bedroom from a dumpy landlady.

Down Broadway tore the black curtained limousine, the observed of all

MYERS MANUFACTURING CO.

THIRD AND CUMBERLAND STREETS, ABOVE MILLER'S SHOE STORE

"I ain't supposed to tell."
 "How much did you get for not telling?" demanded Mrs. Russel.
 "All she had—70 cents."
 "Ah!" Cunningham thrust his hands in his pockets. Then he flushed as he turned to Gilbert Blye.
 Blye scowled, and there was a flash of temper on his dark, handsome face as he thrust some money into the hand of Cunningham.
 "Here's $2," said Orin. "Now, where did you get this bundle?"
 "Tells a always worth more than ten tellin'," he sagely observed and jerked his call slip from his pocket. "There's the address."

Gilbert Blye, casting a glance at the slip, donned his hat and coat, opened the door and strode out on the steps. The stealthy figure which had crept along the hall suddenly darted out of the door after the messenger boy and hurried up the street with him. It was Marie.

Down the street there whizzed the black curtained limousine. Blye hurried to it as it stopped and, with blazing impatience, called, "Come on!"

Cunningham dashed from the house and jumped into the limousine, while Blye gave swift directions to his driver. He, too, hopped in and shut the door and threw up the side curtains, revealing the car empty except for himself and Cunningham. The women in the door called something in a shrill excitement as the car rushed away, but Scattell paid no attention, and the well known and justly famous private detective, Bill Wolf, groaned.

Around the corner dashed the family car of the Moores, and Ned Warner, leaning tensely forward, gritted his teeth and clinched his fists as the black curtained limousine once more rounded a corner.

The dumpy landlady knocked at the door of June's little bedroom and stopped in profound astonishment when she entered. At the rickety table sat her new lodger in a plain, cheap black dress, bent earnestly forward. She was sewing pants!

"Why, I hardly knew you," said the landlady, looking around the room. She waddled to the door of the flimsy wardrobe and peered in. It was empty. "Where's them fine clothes you had?"

"They did not belong to me," June said simply. "I sent them away."
 "Oh, you did! What about the necklace?"
 "That was a gift which I could not accept," and June's eyes dropped. "I sent it away also."
 "Oh, you did!" She cleared her throat and looked at the stack of pants and at the delicate fingers which were laboriously pushing the needle through the coarse cloth. "By the way, I forgot to get any rent from you. I always get a week in advance."
 June smiled wanly and shook her head. "I am sorry," she said. "I have no money."
 "What!" The dumpy landlady jumped to her feet. She was breathing so hard that she wheezed. "No money! Young lady, you'll have to get out!"

 "Oh, no!" pleaded June. "Please!"
 She turned for one last word of appeal, but the landlady's pitiless arm was outstretched.

TRAVELING SOME

The advent of the "horseless buggy" into the wilds of North Carolina is well described by William Courtenay, who is doing such excellent work in "Under Cover."

The old mountaineer, who was standing on the corner of the main street in a certain little town, had never seen an automobile.

When a good-sized touring car came rushing up the street at about thirty miles an hour and slowed down just enough to take the corner on two wheels, his astonishment was extreme.

The old fellow watched the disappearing car with bulging eyes and open mouth. Then, turning to a bystander he remarked solemnly:
 "The horses must sho'ly ha' been traveling some when they got loose from that gen'leman's carriage!"
