A NEW AND SMART BLOUSE.
An Interesting Model with V-Shaped Neck and Long Sleeves.
By MAY MANTON

8579 Blouse with Vest Effect, 34 to 42 bust.

Familiar fashions do not always die easily, women have been very unwilling to give up the comfort of the low collar, and the compromise shown in this blouse has been made in response to an urgent demand. This blouse is a very pretty one with a little vest that allows effective use of contrasting material. It is simple, too, meaning no difficulty for making, and equally pretty for wear with the odd skirt, with the tailored suit, or when made with skirt to match, for a simple one-piece gown. In the picture, the material is embroidered cotton crepe combined with pique, and that combination of a thin material with a heavy one makes a noticeable feature of the new models. Crepe de chine with Bengaline or silk poplin makes a fashionable and attractive combination, and in various ways, the idea of a thin, plain material with a heavy ribbed material is carried out.

The pattern No. 8579 is cut in sizes from 34 to 42 bust measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

Back in 1607 a New World Was Founded

The first colony in America found birth in Jamestown; to be followed a year later by Quebec; and in 1609, New Amsterdam (now New York).

Today we like to speak of the latter as the greatest city in the world both in size and development.

But why so vast a difference between these three former pioneer settlements, all apparently having had an equal beginning?

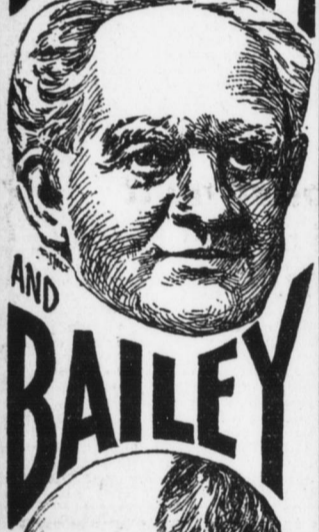

New York grew and developed so rapidly because she proved the best shipping and distributing center for her country.

Much the same is true of our growing institutions of learning that offer the greatest advantages; and our gigantic mercantile establishments that render the best services.

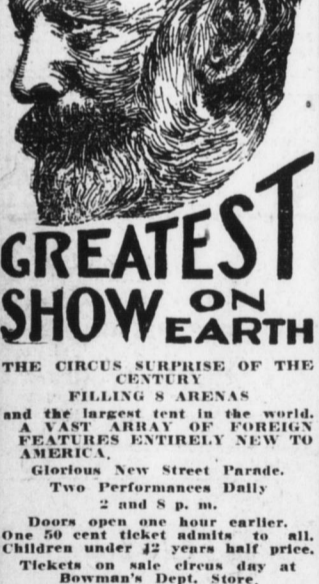

And in the days to come the store that best serves a community will continue to enlarge, and far outdistance such that may have as a motto, solely a selfish gain.

EXPLORER SEEKS AID OF STRONG ARM MAN
Algot Lange Wants Convict to Go on an Exploring Expedition

Philadelphia, April 24.—If there is a hold-trail robber or general all-round holdup man about to finish a term of from ten to fifteen years in the Eastern Penitentiary and he really wants a chance to get a fresh start, there is a job awaiting him.

What is more, this job is no ordinary one: he will have an opportunity to "put it all over" Colonel Roosevelt, for Algot Lange, the explorer, says he is looking for just such a man to take with him, within the next six weeks, to uncharted land in South America. Mr. Lange modestly says he expects to discover about 200 Rivers in Doubt" on his coming trip into the Amazon jungles.

Mr. Lange came to this city yesterday to consult with the publisher of his several books on Jungle life and also to address a meeting of the Home and School League last night. It was while sitting in the office of his publisher at 925 Filbert street yesterday afternoon that he told of his ambitions along the line of uplift for a convict.

"I expect to leave for my greatest exploration undertaking within the next six weeks or two months," the explorer said. "I will take with me a surveyor, and I want another white man. Of course, I will pick up about a dozen natives when I leave Para, Brazil. I believe that a hardened convict would be an excellent man to take along. He would have become accustomed to hardships and should prove an ideal member of our expedition. I will not pay him a salary; he will get just what I get, three meals a day, sometimes, and from two to three years of interesting work. This will save the convict from having to face the world where he is known; and he should think there are no more men in the Eastern Penitentiary who would be glad to grasp this opportunity."

Mr. Lange said he would visit Warden McKenty, either to-day or Monday, and look over the men who are about to be discharged from the prison. If he cannot find a suitable man here, he will try Sing Sing, New York. In fact, he says he already has taken the matter up by letter with Thomas Mott Osborne, the new warden of Sing Sing.

DIED AT ALTOONA
Special to The Telegraph
Duncannon, Pa., April 24.—Word was received here yesterday afternoon, announcing the death of William Early, at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Harry E. Wahl, at Altoona. He was a former resident of Duncannon, and had been in a helpless condition from a stroke of paralysis for some time. The father, mother and two sons had died in the Early family the past two years. Burial will be made here to-morrow afternoon.

DEATH OF MRS. ESTHER WILSON
Special to The Telegraph
Mechanicsburg, Pa., April 24.—Mrs. Esther Wilson died yesterday at the home of her daughter, Mrs. John V. Smith after a short illness with a stroke of paralysis. She was aged 75, and previous to coming here, was a resident of Lewisberry. The funeral service will be held on Monday morning at 9 o'clock here. Burial will be made in Lewisberry graveyard.

Many Acts For Children Featured in Big Circus
It may be a pleasing fiction that the modern circus is primarily intended for the edification and delight of the children; but the fact remains that in the minds of men and women than that which is associated with the entrancements of the sawdust arena—the airy, fairy riders; the whirling acrobats; the gravity-defying aerielists; the fooleries of the clowns; the roar and dash of the hippodrome races, and the wonders of the animal world as displayed in the traveling menagerie.

In human development so potent a mother and child, and sister and brother, but also how dangerous it is to do so, for there is no other one in human development so potent as family affection and the sense of responsibility that this brings with it. Nothing so makes reckless of conduct in either a boy or a girl as the feeling that he or she has nobody belonging to him or her.

And, conversely, the knowledge that he had his widowed mother to support has been the spur in the side of many a boy that has sent him along the path to fame and fortune. Even so great a man as Sir James Barrie says that the thing that gave him courage to persist "at the writing" was his desire that his mother might lie soft at night and sit warm by the fire in the day.

Finally the advocates of the Widowed Mothers' Pension bill have shown that for the same amount of money that the State spends to keep a child in an orphan asylum he can be boarded with his mother and the little home kept together.

It is right that the children should be considered first in this matter and their good determine it, but there is also another side to the question. That is, the mother, who is the one who is interested in the child just as much as the children need the mother.

The mother who has children of an age to be sent to an orphan asylum are themselves young women. Many of them are not overwise, and in spite of having been married and had children, have little real knowledge of the world. Most of them have had few advantages of education and have few resources within themselves.

These women are primitive creatures with primitive instincts. They must have something to love, something to

Women AND THEIR INTERESTS

Effects of State Pensions Upon Mothers

BY DOROTHY DIX

The advocates of the Widowed Mothers' Pension bill have spoken of it only from the children's side of the question. They have shown how much better off a child is in its own home, however humble that home may be, than it is in an orphan asylum, no matter how scientifically and humanely that asylum may be conducted.

They have shown that institution-reared children, who have been brought up to bathe and dress and eat and play and study and work and rise up and sit down to the tap of a bell, almost invariably develop into machine-like men and women, without initiative or originality of their own.

They have shown not only how cruel it is to break the tie between mother and child, and sister and brother, but also how dangerous it is to do so, for there is no other one in human development so potent as family affection and the sense of responsibility that this brings with it. Nothing so makes reckless of conduct in either a boy or a girl as the feeling that he or she has nobody belonging to him or her.

And, conversely, the knowledge that he had his widowed mother to support has been the spur in the side of many a boy that has sent him along the path to fame and fortune. Even so great a man as Sir James Barrie says that the thing that gave him courage to persist "at the writing" was his desire that his mother might lie soft at night and sit warm by the fire in the day.

Finally the advocates of the Widowed Mothers' Pension bill have shown that for the same amount of money that the State spends to keep a child in an orphan asylum he can be boarded with his mother and the little home kept together.

It is right that the children should be considered first in this matter and their good determine it, but there is also another side to the question. That is, the mother, who is the one who is interested in the child just as much as the children need the mother.

The mother who has children of an age to be sent to an orphan asylum are themselves young women. Many of them are not overwise, and in spite of having been married and had children, have little real knowledge of the world. Most of them have had few advantages of education and have few resources within themselves.

These women are primitive creatures with primitive instincts. They must have something to love, something to think about, something to work for. Give them the normal life of a woman with husband and children to fill their days with interest, and they are good women. Take away from them all that they care for, and you have snapped their anchor chain that held them safe and steady in the surge of temptations that beats about every goodlooking young woman who is alone in the world.

The death of a day laborer, and the breaking up of a two-room home is a far more poignant tragedy than the passing away of a millionaire whose family have only their personal loss to mourn. Their home remains intact. The bereaved widow does not have to have her heart torn in twain a second time by losing her children as well as her husband.

But this is the all too common bitter fate of the poor woman when the bread-winner of her household dies. She cannot make by her own labor enough to feed the hungry mouths of her brood, and so her little ones are taken from her and sent to orphan asylums. Who can blame a woman thus cruelly used by destiny if she tries to drown the memory of happier days in drink, or dulls the aching, longing for her loved ones by dope, or if, when there seems no right way to happiness she attempts to find it in the wrong way?

We hear much of a mother's ennobling and restraining influence over her children. It is not a tithe of what a child's influence is over a mother. The weakest baby hands that ever fumbled at a woman's breast have more power for uplift in them than all the preaching and moral platitudes that every ever uttered. The eyes that a woman must be able to meet fearlessly are her children's. And from the highest to the lowest, the thought of her children has been a magic talisman that has given millions of women the strength to resist temptation.

Only the most abandoned of women will let evil come near her children or permit them to see her do a wrong act, and in this way the child becomes the guardian and protector of the mother.

With her little home kept together, and her children to work for, to be interested in, to expend her affections upon, there is small chance of the widowed mother not living an exemplary life. Robbed by death of her husband, and of poverty of her home and children, who can tell to what lengths despair may drive her, or which of us will dare to cast the first stone if her sin has been partly caused by our stupid laws?

For the sake of the woman as well as of the child, let us pass the Widowed Mothers' Pension bill, and not be guilty of separating a mother and her babes, and breaking up a home that might have been kept together.
