The Gardens of Our Soul

By BEATRICE FAIRFAX

If you owned a garden plot of rich, fertile soil would you trust to chance winds to bear seeds to it? Or would you deliberately sow it with tangling weeds, or even full and unfragrant flowers?

But you do own a garden plot of the richest and most fertile soil imaginable—a garden plot teeming with sustenance for lovely flowers and wonderful foliage, gracious in shadow and dappled with sunlight.

I am not over-romantic or rashly idealistic when I tell you that of your own nature you may make a glorious garden. I am just making a picture for you of a fact.

Exactly in the way a wise gardener cultivates his plot—freeing it from weeds and trailing to growth the flowers and fruits he loves, you may tend the garden of your mind and soul.

Whether you cultivate or neglect your nature it still must produce something. Why not direct the process—and intelligently direct it to root?

The very first thing to do is to go weeding. Root up useless unkind, envious, discontented, impure and selfish thoughts. They choke the ground in which you might be cultivating wonderful bloom.

A jealous thought can't think itself. You have to nourish the weedlike idea that blows into your mind, or it can't take root. Don't think wrong thoughts—just push them back into the void from which they came.

The wind of circumstance will blow you where it lists and buffet you about only so long as you think yourself into its power. If you let events blow weeds into your garden and complain about your inability to grow flowers, of course you will have a waste of weeds.
