Most Infernal Outrage of War, Says Drexel

London, May 8.—Anthony J. Drexel, at his home in Grosvenor Square, today denounced the sinking of the Lusitania as the "most infernal outrage that has happened during the war."

Mr. Drexel sailed on the Lusitania for New York on March 15 last, when Captain Dow was in command. He came back on the American liner New York with Harry Lehr because the British was afraid to sail on a steamer flying over the head of the American flag.

"I don't see how the American government," said Mr. Drexel, "can do anything to go into war itself if the lives of its citizens are to be endangered in this way by the Germans. America must act sternly if Americans are to face the protection of their country means anything. Can it be that America will allow the Germans to murder her citizens?"

"For my part," he said, "I am for war. I feel helpless to express my feelings of dismay and horror over this damnable thing. How do we know that the Germans will not torpedo a ship flying the American flag? We are in this horrible work of the Germans to end."

German Consulate Clerks Cheer News of Disaster

Philadelphia, May 8.—Unrestrained joy at the news of the sinking of the Lusitania by a German submarine was manifested by Dr. George Stobbe, German consul in Philadelphia, and by the clerks of the consulate.

"Ach! Is it true? Is it true?" he questioned eagerly, his face lit up by a radiant smile of pleasure, when told of the sinking of the ship.

The consul at his office yesterday. Clerks dropped their work and cheered about their chief in breathless anticipation of hearing the news verified.

At the nod of the newspaper reporter, almost before he had time to translate the nod into speech, deafening cheers broke forth and question after question was asked to make sure that the longed-for report was true.

A busy hum of conversation, carried on in German, flowed among the group. Not the least happy was the consul himself, who carried away by enthusiasm to preserve official dignity.

When he was asked for a statement for publication Doctor Stobbe assumed his accustomed imperious ability and refused, saying he must have time to think the matter over.

Wilfred Powell, English consul general in this city, heard the news with no outward show of feeling and refused comment on the situation.
