Strange Religious Stir in Great Universities

Remarkable Revivals at Yale, Princeton and Various State Universities; Two Carloads of Experts For Penn State

(By The Religious Rambler.)

A NEW, widespread and important religious movement all unheralded, has gained tremendous momentum in the colleges and universities of North America during the past year, profoundly influencing these centers of thought. While college revivals are not a new thing, yet the "campaigns" of the past year have been without a parallel, resulting in thousands of conversions and of decisions for life work. In their own way they are as dramatic as anything in a "Billy" Sunday revival.

All sections of the country have been touched by this strange stir in the spiritual experience of the institutions of higher learning. Notable campaigns are reported since the first of the year at Yale, Princeton, Wisconsin, Michigan, State College, Pennsylvania, Kansas University, North Carolina University, University of Toronto, McGill, and more than two score of denominational colleges.

A New Mode of College Evangelism Concentration, system, expertness, characterize this new method of gospeling among students. The work is done along modern philosophical lines, carrying into the religious service the conclusions of the class room. The first step is to engross the attention of the whole institution, so that religion may be made the major interest for the time being of the entire student body.

Special Pullmans For Religion The most notable of these college campaigns was that conducted several weeks ago in State College, Pennsylvania, where one hundred and fifty experts gathered from far and near to concentrate for five days upon the little community in the center of Pennsylvania. Fifty other educational institutions from points as far west as Wisconsin, and as far south as North Carolina, were represented in this force of specialists. Two special Pullman cars were chartered to carry the workers from New York to State College.

The variety of talent employed is indicated by the names: John R. Mott, the world student leader, was the outstanding figure, Mrs. William Borden, the mother of the young millionaire, William Borden, who died recently in Cairo while preparing for mission service, was one of the women workers. The Rev. John Douglas Adam, preacher, philosopher and professor, was present to deal with abstruse speculative problems. William F. Cochran, the wealthy young Christian Socialist of Baltimore, presented another viewpoint. A whole array of distinguished college athletes were prepared to talk from the sympathetic understanding of student life.

These were all volunteers. The one hundred and fifty workers represented the sort of assistance which money could not possibly employ. The leaders of men are interested in helping youth in its vital problems. The concentration of forces at State College was a twentieth century American phenomenon worthy of fuller consideration and analysis than perhaps it will ever receive.

As a result of the campaign, including fraternity meetings and private interviews that lasted, on some occasions, until nearly daylight in the morning, there were a thousand decision cards signed.

A Revival For the Faculty While one should be prepared for anything new and audacious in religious work in these unconventional times, yet it rather takes one's breath away to learn that at State College revival meetings exclusively for the members of the faculty were held.

There were six nights of meetings attended by the hundred members of the faculty, and there were a number of definite decisions on the part of the teachers to unite with the Christian church. Professor Wright, of Yale, was in charge of this unique campaign.

Of course the faculty at State College, led by President Sparks, is already a dominantly Christian, and such a conspicuous religious work as has been done by the Christian forces under Frank Buchman, would not have been possible. Few distinctly denominational institutions show the close co-operation of faculty with the volunteer Christian workers that is found in State College.

President Sparks says that this revival campaign has perceptibly lifted the college standards and class room efficiency. In addition, it has cleaned up the student life and promoted a better college spirit. Fifteen hundred of the State College students, by the way, petitioned the Bellefonte judges to prohibit the sale of liquor to students.

Into the Denominational Colleges Nowadays there is a new co-operation between the Y. M. C. A. forces and the denominations that makes a story of itself. The two have been working together in such cases as the College Visitation Work of the Joint Committee of the Presbyterian Boards of Education and Evangelism. Meetings similar to those already outlined at Yale and Penn State have been held in recent months in forty-eight Presbyterian institutions of learning scattered throughout the land. These have been real revivals; in some cases radically making over the life of the institution.

In certain instances, notably at Wooster, Ohio, the meetings were characterized by extraordinary penitence and confessions on the part of the students. At Wooster nearly two hundred men publicly admitted to their fellow students shameful sins that were wholly unsuspected by the faculty. The characteristics of the Welsh revival have marked these democratic movements in the colleges during the past winter.

With "Billy" Sunday and hundreds of kindred spirits stirring the masses in the cities and towns of the country, and with the evangelistic campaigns profoundly moving upon the nation's leadership of to-morrow, as found in the colleges of to-day, it would seem as if a revival different from any the country has known has come upon our modern America.

Departure of Italians Is Believed to Indicate War

The departure of several Italians from this city within the last few days is taken by those in close touch with Italy's situation as an indication that she will declare war soon. It is rumored that scores of reservists are preparing to leave for their mother country so that they will be on hand in time of need. Men prominent in the foreign colony deny that a summons has been issued for reservists.

For the last few days, steamship agents, it has been reported, have been canvassing this city and Steelton in an effort to find the number of Italians who will sail.

Setting the Style-Pace

COPYRIGHT 1915 THE HOUSE OF KUPPENHEIMER

To prove how far we've advanced in producing pleasing styles, get out the family album and look at grand-father in his best Sunday suit... rather comical looking duds, weren't they?

---and there are men to-day who hold back from the new styles, who think the new lines extreme, they sigh for the saggy baggy days of old they seldom look well dressed.

We have always led in showing the new styles, we feature each new idea as fast as it is produced and stamped with the approval of

and if you will check up on the popular styles of today, the styles which other stores are now featuring, which are being worn generally, you'll find that these styles were heralded here in this Live Store, six, eight or twelve months ago.

We'll take our chances on being called extremists to hold our place of leadership... We intend to maintain our position as the forecasters of fashion... We'll always show the New Styles first, the Standard Styles with them; every style if it's good style; always.

More than two score new Spring models now on display; a half thousand or more patterns and shades; every weave of pure wool; priced in proof of greater value giving at
