Millions of other women have already found out that "Kayser" is the one thing to look for in a silk glove. Have you?

"I think it's awfully warm, I don't know what you think about it," said Helen languidly, as she and her mother came out of the large department store and walked slowly up Fifth avenue. "I don't feel like looking any further just now, mother, let's go in somewhere and have lunch, then we can look again afterward."

"All right," consented her mother, "although I'd feel better about it if we got it settled first. Here's some in this window, shall we go in here?"

Helen was on the point of answering crossly, but she choked the retort that had risen to her lips and followed her mother meekly into the store where the taffeta had been displayed in the windows. It seemed to Helen as though they had visited fifty places to match the piece of black taffeta that her mother had insisted upon getting.

Helen thought herself that the silk could have been matched near enough at several other places, but her mother insisted that there were more shades of black than of any color, so they had persisted, and Helen, never a very ardent shopper, had dropped considerably since they had started.

Her veil had come loose and in trying to fix it she had pulled her hair down at the side. She was conscious that she was not looking her best and the fact made her feel more cross. She glanced at the silk that the man brought out listlessly and without interest, and was hardly conscious that her mother had at last had several yards measured off until the package had been delivered and they were moving toward the door.

"Are you ready to have lunch now?" she asked again, and her mother assented graciously as they started toward the elevator.

Her Mother Finds It Really Enjoyable

"We might as well have it right here," said Helen, somewhat brighter at the prospect of something to eat and some rest in the rest room she took off her hat and brushed up her hair as well as she could. By the time they were seated in the restaurant had had ordered iced coffee, with some other things, she felt almost gracious.

Her mother was frankly enjoying herself. The trip through the different stores had not tired her in the least, and there was a faint color in her cheeks.

"I declare, mother," said Helen enviously. "You look the younger of the two. Why, you actually look as if you had enjoyed the morning."

"I have," said her mother, turning to Helen and smiling, "and I have tired you out completely. I'm sorry, dear, it won't happen again."

"Nonsense," said Helen reassuringly. "Just as if I didn't love to help you get things. I didn't sleep very well last night, that's all. The coffee will brace me up, you'll see."

They lingered over the meal a long time. Their table was near a window, and the wind stirred the curtains lazily with a little vagrant breeze that was almost hot, and yet refreshing.

"This is hot weather for this time of the year," said Helen finally as she ate her ice cream and listened to the gems from one of the successful musical comedies that the orchestra was playing. "I'll tell you what we'll do this afternoon, mother. The things I was going to buy are not important and can wait and you and I will go to a matinee."

"Oh, no, Helen, what makes you spend the money," the older woman protested.

"But I want to. I hated to leave you home the other evening and I want you to see a couple of good plays before you go back."

They rose as the girl brought Helen her change and walked out of the room slowly. Helen looked at her watch as they got into the elevator and saw that they had just time to walk up to the theater.

"Is there anything particular that you would like to see," she asked, turning to her mother who looked puzzled.

"No, dear, you know best about that. Whatever you like I'd like, excepting those silly musical shows."

She Takes Her to See a Modern Play

Helen laughed. Warren hated musical shows, too, and she herself preferred a drama of some kind. She had an idea that her mother would like a farce, and as she ran over the different plays in her mind the idea occurred to her to buy seats for a play that she had wanted to see all winter. She had read the book and although it was a little too heavy for what she had thought in the first place, still she would like very much to see it staged.

She knew Warren would refuse to buy seats for it, and this was a good chance to see it if she were going to. So, without any more thought on the subject, Helen walked into the lobby and bought seats for the play she had wanted to see.

Her mother became engrossed in her program and examined it minutely. Helen thought, with a little twinge of conscience, that her mother might disapprove of a play of this kind, but she saved her conscience with the thought that she might take her to see something else later.

The curtain went up and the play began. Helen was intensely interested and, at the close of the first act, turned to her mother impulsively to ask her how she liked it.

"I like it pretty well," the other woman vouchsafed, but was very quiet, nevertheless. At the end of the second act she did not speak to Helen, and Helen, vaguely uncomfortable, hardly knew what to offer in the way of conversation. The play dragged through four acts, which Helen hardly enjoyed because of her mother's face. At the close of the performance she helped her mother into her coat and asked, laughing, if she had liked it.

Her mother was frankly shocked and said so.

"Why, they never used to play things like that," she said as they mingled with the crowd streaming out of the theater. "It leaves a bad taste in my mouth."

Helen laughed at her way of putting it, but thought, after all, that it was quite to the point.

"Never mind, we'll see something better next time," she said, comfortingly. "Something lighter than this. I might have known that you wouldn't like it."

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 13 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

WITH THE FASHIONABLE FLARE.

A New Skirt in Semi-Circular Style, that can be Made with Empire or with Slightly Raised Waist Line.

By MAY MANTON

Undoubtedly the semi-circular skirt is a favorite one and will continue to be such throughout the Spring. This one takes unusually graceful flare and folds, and at the same time is smooth over the hips. The model will be found a good one for many uses. It is exceedingly smart for the coat suit, and it also is good for a gown and the separate skirt. It can be made from heavy material and from thin, from wool, from silk, from linen and from cotton. When the Empire waist line is used the skirt is arranged over a fitted girdle. For a slightly raised waist line it is arranged over webbing and for the natural waist line it is arranged over a belt.

For the medium size will be needed 4 3/4 yards 27 inches, 3 3/4 yards 36 or 2 3/4 yards 44 inches wide. The width at the lower edge is 2 yards 24 inches.

The pattern 8571-A is cut in sizes from 24 to 34 inches waist measure. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

Trimmed Hats
THAT'S OUR STRONG POINT

Saturday Is Our Big Trimmed Hat Day

We are making up the kind of Hat that our customers demand, and making them as good as can be made for as little money as possible. That does not refer to any particular price hat — the principle is the same on a hat at $3.00 or a hat at $10.00.

The ordinary woman is not interested in an unsalable hat advertised at about one-half and one-fourth of its regular price. If it is not the hat she wants she won't buy it at any price.

We are specializing hats to suit the person—to suit the season and to suit your purse—which is a fact.

We prepared all week for Saturday's special selling and have some extraordinary good hats on sale for very little money.

TO TALK ON PANAMA CANAL'S EQUIPMENT

Electrical Engineer Will Exhibit Slides, Showing Powerful Machinery in Operation

John Liston of the General Electric Company will deliver a lecture this evening before the Engineers' Society of Pennsylvania on "The Panama Canal and Its Electrical Equipment."

The lecturer will tell of the uses of electricity in the construction of this giant engineering project and by motion pictures will show the actual operation of electrically driven machinery used by the government. He will describe the present electrical equipment for the locks. This is the last of the series of lectures given during the winter under the auspices of the Engineers' Society. Public Service men, State officials and men interested in this branch of engineering have been invited to attend the lecture which will be given in the clubhouse at 31 South Front street.
