As to "Personal Liberty"

"If the abolishment of liquor deprives the individual of his personal liberty," continued Major Smith, "such deprivation preserves the liberty of his family, for while he has the right to drink—maybe—his wife certainly has the right to associate with a sober husband.

"He has a right to spend his own money, but she has the right to her own happiness; the price of a drink ranges from a dime to damnation—the drinker pays the dime and family pays the damnation,
