King Oscar 5c Cigars

A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, and a cigar is no better than its filler despite all exterior frills and fancies.

Can't get away from that fact. To be a good smoke the filler must be good.

Remember—a cigar that looks good doesn't always prove a good smoke. Good thing to bank on reputation if you really want a full measure of cigar value.

Here's a reputation that should catch your eye and coax your nickel willingly—

GREAT RECEPTION TO AMBASSADOR NAON

Governor Brumbaugh Eulogizes
Dr. Naon; Boomed For the Presidency

URGES AMERICAN SOLIDARITY

Says Western Hemisphere Must Influence Great International Reorganization

Dr. R. S. Naon, the Argentine ambassador, was given an unprecedented legislative honor and boomed for the presidency of his progressive country at the conclusion of his address at the Capitol last yesterday afternoon.

The ambassador had made a brilliant and scholarly address on Pan-Americanism and peace. When he finished Governor Brumbaugh spoke and eulogized the diplomat. In closing his address Dr. Naon said:

"In the face of this enormous catastrophe the bearing of America cannot be but expectant and reconstructive if, as I believe, there is still reason to trust that the idea of human solidarity is the final end of social evolution. May God grant that, inspired by that idea and prompted by our community of interests, all the nations of America before long may co-operate in the task, a thousand times blessed, of restoring lasting peace and friendship among the peoples of Europe, together with the sentiment of that solidarity as the basis for their future action."

"It is for us," the Ambassador said, "the countries far removed from the scene and aloof from the interests in the midst of which the European discussions have been growing until this terrible climax, to take up the arduous but glorious task of reincarnating modern civilization. But to do this it becomes essential to readjust the system of our political ties; to correct, until they are made to vanish, the cause of possible disagreements; and, finally, to cement American solidarity, founding it upon the only immovable base in the relation of countries, that is to say, upon the maintenance of the principles of right, of justice and of reciprocal tolerance."

"To America is reserved," the Ambassador went on to say, "the honorable task of exercising an influence in the transformation of the old international organization of the world by the example of its organization of solidarity, which, at the same time that it maintains in all its vigor and to its fullest extent each and every one of the national organizations, has the international life without dread, without disturbance and without conflict."

Lieutenant-Governor McClain presided over the joint session of the two houses. He made a brief reply to the Ambassador, in which he hoped that the dreams of the diplomat would come true, and then introduced Governor Brumbaugh, who said:

"Less than two years ago in the harbor at Antwerp I saw a large vessel loading with machinery for the Argentine Republic and I wondered then, and I wonder now, why it is that a great, splendid republic like the Argentine should not buy its machinery and conduct its foreign trade with its sister republic to the North instead of with the monarchies of Europe; and the fault is not theirs but our own that this is not the case, for when we shall have built, as we ought long ago to have done, a merchant marine commensurate with the dignity and industry of our people, we shall have this great industrial relation with these marvelous republics of our sister continent to the South; for where the flag of commerce goes there also, in due season, will go the flag of brotherhood and of good will, and of mutual governmental co-operation."

"In the late '60's, following our Civil War, there came from this great Argentine Republic as its minister to America, a most distinguished man. The leading educator of the Argentine was sent as minister to our country and here, in the discharge of his important international duties, Sarmiento gained such an insight into the ultimate destiny of America that he was called back to his own country to become the president of the Argentine; and the Ambassador will bear witness to the fact that from that day to this the Argentine has had a progress and development and spirit incomparably superior to that of any other republic in South America. I understand that the distinguished Ambassador who has addressed you so ably this afternoon is about to return to his home land. It may well be that history will again repeat itself and that the man who won his first distinctions in his home country as a great educator and who now is regarded as the dean in scholarship among the ambassadors of our own Capitol, may, like his great predecessor, return to rule over and guide his country. Whether that be so or not it is our wish, Mr. Ambassador, that it shall be so (applause), and we can only say to you, sir, in the language of your own people, as you go from us to-day, este manyo, senor, for if you come again to-morrow or any to-morrow you will be as welcome as you are welcome here to-day, sir."

"Had I the time I should like to tell you of that marvelous republic to the South, whose capital city, the third city on the American Continent, the finest city in many ways in the new world, a country of agricultural and of educational uplift, a country in which my friend has done such splendid work for you."

"I should like to talk to you about that. I have not the time, but here is the accredited Ambassador of that great republic standing and pleading with us that we shall join hands in developing here a national conscience of mutual co-operation and good will that will put the spirit of republican government into all the peoples of the world; and surely no message could be more gracious than that to us, with the urgent appeal for our sympathy such as this."

"Mr. Ambassador, I am grateful to you, the eight millions of people in this Commonwealth are grateful to you for this message to-day, sir."

On motion of Senator Sprout a message of felicitation was sent to the President of the Argentine Republic, after which the joint session was adjourned and Ambassador Naon was tendered an informal reception.

The message sent to Buenos Aires was as follows:

"To the President of the Republic:

"As presiding officer and instructed by unanimous vote of the General Assembly of both houses of the Legislature, I send from our Governor and the people of Pennsylvania greetings to Your Excellency, and through you to the people of Argentina, on this day, when your Ambassador, Dr. Naon, has addressed our joint session with so great sincerity and eloquence. Your Ambassador, who is the most popular representative that any people has sent to our shores, has put the name and achievements of your great country in the mind and heart of every American citizen. (Signed) "FRANK B. McCLAIN," Lieutenant-Governor."

All Danger of Disastrous Twine Famine Is Passed

Wheat growers may congratulate themselves on the fact that the binder twine situation promises to work out satisfactorily. Sisal was moving freely from Yucatan in April, and there will be enough twine to supply the harvesters. The price will probably be lower than last year.

The government deserves praise for the promptness in meeting the trouble in Yucatan. There was an anxious period when it seemed that the paralyzing revolution in southern Mexico would cause a disastrous twine famine in the United States.

It is a pleasure, in this connection, to give the International Harvester Company credit for its stand in the emergency. The company is the largest manufacturer of twine and as its contract called for a large quantity of sisal, it was in a sense in command of the situation. The Harvester company was unselfish, however, in dividing its shipments with other manufacturers, and while it might easily have increased the price, and even have been justified in doing so because of the disturbed conditions and the high freight rates, it has been treating its patrons and the other manufacturers with fairness.—Farm Life.
