A score or more of Boston banking, houses are concerned over the so-called Tinkham bill, which goes into effect June 2, the net effect of which will be to prevent investment bankers from making a profit on the sale of securities to trust companies of which they are directors. An act of similar import, but applying to bankers who are members of national banks, is included in the Federal reserve statute. The Tinkham bill provides that: "Other than the usual salary or director's fee paid to any officer, director or employe of a trust company, and other than a reasonable fee for services rendered to the company, no officer, director, employe or attorney of a trust company sectly or attorney of a trust company sectly or attorney of a trust company is considered to the consideration of the consection with any transaction or business of the trust company."
