Helen saw the last guest depart with a sense of relief that she could not have put in words. The fact that the under a nervous strain more or less had kept his word and freed her out completely. Then, too, the excitement of receiving the flowers from Lieutenant Roberts had been a strain on her nerves and the fact that Warren had kept his word and freed her out completely. wise to let the young man come up when Warren wasn't there. Helen came into the room a moment later. "I want you to stay here, mother, then Warren won't have a chance to disappoint."

Helen Thinks Warren Might Have Phoned

Helen roamed around the different rooms looking in to see if Winifred were all right and then glancing at herself in her own mirror as she passed. Seven-thirty came and no Warren.

Helen put on a new gown, a very becoming flame-colored taffeta. As she was arranging the roses the clerk in the latch and Warren came in. "Hello, dear!" said Helen, going out to meet him. "Come out to the diningroom and have your dinner."

STORY NO. 1—INSTALLMENT NO. 1 WHO'S WHO? Story No. 1 The Price of Fame By EDWIN BLISS

In the carriage he could not drive that contrast from his preoccupied mind. He felt himself already a bit irritated at the insistence of Ann that the tiny cottage, the humble little home in Los Angeles should not be sold, that not a stick of the furniture be changed. She had insisted it was merely a bit of sentiment, but the firmness with which she defended her wish made him believe it had its birth in foreboding for the future.

Arrogant with the delightful arrogance of the artist who has worked hard for achievement his eyes sought those of Olga Drake in her box at the head of the diamond horseshoe. That very day Ann had been granted her interjectory decree of divorce that very day a sensational newspaper had whispered the name of Miss Drake in connection with it; that very day he had boasted to her that he would make amends for that; and now—now, in the first performance of the widely heralded new opera, he was singing as he had never sang before, singing with the abandonment of one from whom all shakies are broken, singing as the composer had dreamed his opera might be some day sung by a greater singer than the world had ever yet produced. And as his eyes met those of Olga Drake, he caught that look of pride, of pride in ownership, of pride in the thing he had done, that he had forgiven the vulgar item in the paper, that she was willing to forgive much more than—

Clear, ringing, sweet toned as any bell, holding the audience spellbound, with eyes slow the voice of Merwin rang out. And then the song died in mid-air, seemed to halt upon its course. The singer's hand clutched at his throat, clutched desperately there as though by sheer brute strength he would force out the sounds that the vocal chords refused to give. His lips opened and closed, closed and opened. A mute he stood there, a ludicrous mute, sawing the air with his hands, desperately, wildly.

about nothing in particular, was aware that his face was burning. For his wife, the woman he had loved, was staring at him in piteous appeal, indifferent to the world about her, the world into which his fame had thrust her. And the wife of a milkman she would remain, containing nothing at all save her own comfort, her right floor thrust out from her gown, the slipper that had become uncomfortable thrust to one side.

He looked at Olga Drake then, and her eyes were fastened upon the vagrant slipper, a faint suggestion of a smile about her lips. Merwin smothered an oath in his throat. A farmer's daughter he had married. A milkman's wife he had made her. And, equally indifferent to aught she was one still.

VI. He paced the library floor nervously, every nerve in his body jangling discordantly at the chatter of his wife in the next room, the confusion of her undignified romping with the baby. Only the night before he had given a wretched performance, his voice turning hoarse at the night before he had tiffed with Olga Drake, for the first time in all the months during which their intimacy had grown to such an extent that there were whispers about his wife.

First he had tried to break away from the spell she cast upon him. But his work threw him with her set and his wife used every subterfuge to avoid accompanying him to any affair which might aid him in the social world, always pleading to be allowed to remain with the baby.

And now she was late. He looked at his watch nervously then whirled to the stairs and tapped upon her door. No answer from within save the shrill cry of childish laughter of his baby. Curiously enough that sound irritated him.

NEW MILITIA LAW NOW EFFECTIVE

Governor's Troop One of the Last in Which the Men Will Select Their Major Officers

Officers and men of the Eighth Infantry and Governor's Troop have elected their last officer, with the exception of second lieutenant. The new military code, passed by the State Legislature on April 24 of this year, became effective yesterday, and from now on colonels, lieutenant colonels, majors, captains and first lieutenants of companies will be appointed by the Governor. Staff captains and lieutenants will, as before, be appointed by the colonel with the approval of the brigade commander.

Formerly the enlisted men of companies chose their captains, first and second lieutenants, while the colonels, lieutenant colonels and majors were chosen by vote of the commissioned officers of the regiments. All of these now lose their voice in the naming of officers with the necessity of the enlisted men of companies for the choice of second lieutenant.

One important result of the change in the code making the officers appointive by the Governor, instead of by election, is that it will throw regimental staff positions open to line officers more freely than before. Herebefore the effect of the necessity to be elected to an office, for instance, major, was to keep line officers, the electors, from desiring staff positions. It was the practice to elect to field positions only line officers. Now, a field officer being an appointive officer may be appointed from any department. Consequently a man who becomes a staff officer, it would seem, would not thereby lose his qualifications for advancement, if he is meritorious, to a field position—which a major is.

This apparently will have the effect to greatly strengthen the personnel of the staff group. It also tends to assist in the compilation of the personal popularity of the line officer, if he is not meritorious from a military standpoint, it will be hopeless for him to aspire to any higher office. All of these effects are highly beneficial to the National Guard and to the component units in particular.

Another change which goes into effect Tuesday morning is that of exempting members of the National Guard during their terms from jury duty, if the members so desire. During encampments, etc., they must except themselves from jury duty. The new code reduces the maximum of infantry companies in the State from 180 to 150, but increases the maximum for field artillery from five batteries to one brigade. Cavalry remains the same, one regiment. Under the new act provision is made for one ammunition train, one sanitary train and one supply train. None of these were provided for in the Act of 1911.

The medical corps is increased from twenty majors and forty captains on first lieutenants, to twenty-five majors and eighty captains and first lieutenants.

A number of minor changes, of interest mainly to the men in service, are made and in many respects the new code greatly resembles that of 1911, particularly the parts relating to discipline, clothing, and other equipment.

The election of officers of the Governor's Troop, conducted by Colonel John P. Wood, of the First Regiment of Cavalry, on Thursday, May 27, was probably the very last in which the men of a command will choose their own officers by vote.

A FASHIONABLE FROCK

A New Model with Wide Belt and Convenient Pocket. By MAY MANTON

8605 Girl's Dress, 6 to 12 years.

Pockets make a feature of the newest fashions and they appear upon girls' dresses as they do upon the skirts of their elders. Here is a frock that is made with wide belt upon which a patch pocket is arranged. It is exceedingly smart, yet quite simple and eminently child-like in effect. The straight skirt is plaited and the plain blouse is frilled only at the lower edge. The sleeves are of the set-in sort and can be made either long or short. In the picture, the material is one of the new cotton sponges of light weight, showing line of pale green on a white background, but the model is a good one for serge and other similar wool materials and also for the many excellent cottons and linens that are adapted to girls' wear. Poplin and crepe are especially well liked and the new crepe-cloths are charming and the sponge illustrated is both serviceable and fashionable.

For the 10 year size will be required 4 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 3 1/2 yds. 36, 2 1/2 yds. 44 in. wide, with 3/4 yd. 27, for the trimming.

The Simple Way to Keep Your Baby Well

See that your baby gets enough fresh air, sleeps a certain number of hours each day, wears the right clothes, and gets the proper food. Then you will have a well baby, a happy baby, a rosy, dimpled baby.

If, in spite of all your loving care, baby loses weight, grows pale and restless, he is not getting the right food. A well nourished baby is seldom sick.

Nestlé's Food. Nestlé's is made from pure, rich milk from healthy cows, milked in clean dairies, purified and modified so that the tiniest, frailest baby can digest it. The heavy tough curd is made soft and fleecy as in mother's milk, and the special things your baby needs to build a healthy little body are added. Just add cold water and boil, and it is ready for your baby.

Send the coupon for the book about babies written by specialists. It tells you how to keep your baby well, how to make him a "Better Baby." With this comes a big, free sample box of Nestlé's—enough for 12 feedings. Don't delay. Your baby's future health depends on the food you give him now.
