Some specially acute torment must be reserved for the window dresser of a great city's shops. By caravan and boat and rail, by camel, ibex, mule, and horse come the treasures of the world into his cunning hands. Camp, mountain and desert are scoured and the lives of their wild inhabitants sacrificed that he may be adorned. Lofted and factories stifle human lives without stint that the window dresser may allure the throng. Artists and sculptors contrive edifices of rare beauty that the creations dear to femininity may be more enticingly displayed off "Come," says the window dresser to the world, "here I offer you that which will bring back flickle lover or indifferent husband, the color to show off the sparkle in your eyes, to make a charming that which is now a defunct. And of the thousands who listen to the voice from behind the plate glass, but few may buy the articles while the rest purchase only envy, Misery, Grief, Dissatisfaction."

It was a particularly charming pair of slippers, and the identical shade of ribbon she desired that caught and held Rita Deane's eyes. Of course, purchase was out of the question. Since the earliest remembrance her father had drummed into her pretty head that personal vanity was the deadliest of sins. A heathen soul might be saved from that ribbon would cost. And besides—Mrs. Sharpe, the Rev. Deane's housekeeper, held tightly to her arm.

Surreptitiously, Rita fumbled the money in her purse. Yes, she had enough—just enough. She looked again into the window and hot rebellion seized her. She lifted her eyes to another window on the seventh floor of the great office building across the street, where James White, her fiancé, transacted the affairs of his huge estate. She could see him dimly, pacing up and down in his office, now and then glancing at a letter in his hand—a letter from her father inquiring how she was getting on.

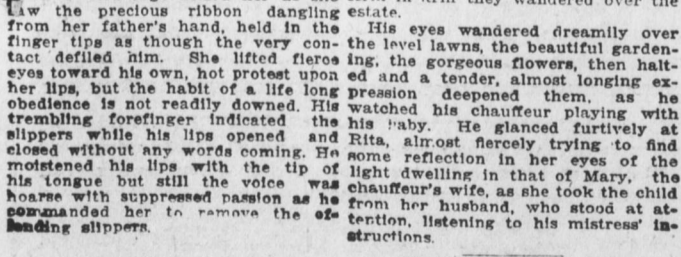

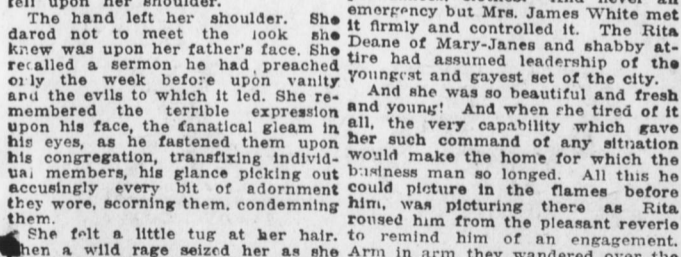

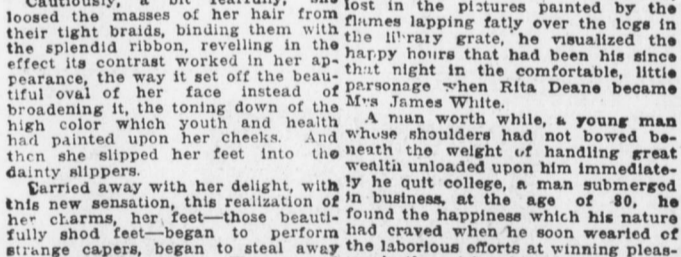

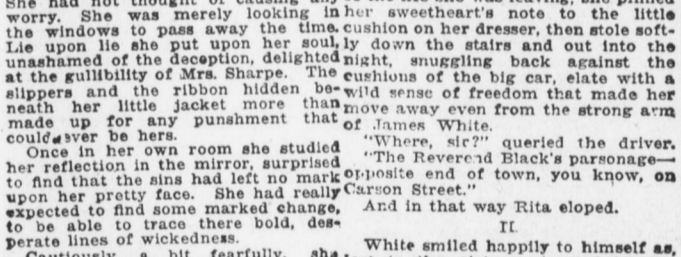

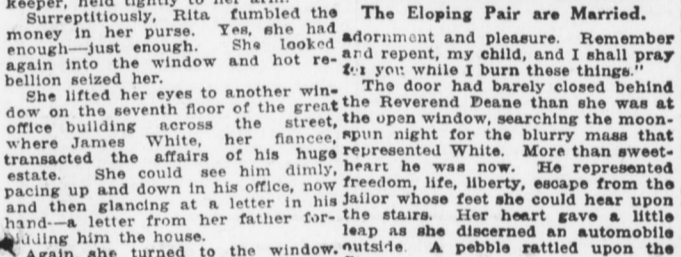

Again she turned to the window. Some sudden impulse of insatiable greed, which seemed apart from her real self, yet a something which she delighted in, she cried, excitedly, "Look! Look! Look!" toward the end of the line of blocked traffic. Curiously won. As Mrs. Sharpe's iron fingers relaxed upon her grip, Rita Deane's feet glided inside the doors of the shop. It was a full five minutes before she returned, innocently assuming an air of injury at the housekeeper's reproaches for her disappearance. She had not thought of causing any of her windows to pass away the time she spent lying upon her back, and into the unmarked depths of a slippers and the ribbon hidden beneath her little jacket more than made up for any punishment that could ever be hers. Once in her own room she studied her reflection in the mirror, surprised to find that the sins had left no mark upon her pretty face. She had really expected to find some marked change, to be able to trace there bold, desperate lines of wickedness.

Cautiously, but carefully, she loosened the masses of her hair from their tight braids, binding them with the effect its contrast worked in her appearance, the way it set off the beautiful oval of her face. Instead of broadening it, the toning down of the high color which youth and health had painted upon her cheeks. And then she slipped her feet into the dainty slippers. Carried away with her delight, with this new sensation, this realization of her charms, her feet—those beautiful feet—began to perform strange capers, began to steal away the sense of caution. They moved in gay, spirited steps, faster, ever faster, until the dancing girl seemed more like a festive wood-sprite. Ringed in this hour of bliss, than the daughter of a clergyman. Round and round she whirled, pivoted, poised, touching the dingy carpeting disdainfully, as though the air itself might prove substantial enough to support one so light and graceful. And always, always were her eyes upon the slippers, feet, feasting themselves there, furnishing a glutinous quantity of pabulum to her vanity-starved little heart. And then—a hand fell upon her shoulder. The hand left her shoulder. She dared not meet the look she knew was upon her father's face. She recalled a sermon he had preached only the week before upon vanity and the evils to which it led. She remembered the terrible expression upon his face, the fanatical gleam in his eyes, as he fastened them upon his congregation, transfixing individual members, his glance picking out accusingly every bit of adornment they wore, scoring them, condemning them.

She felt a little tug at her hair. Then a wild rage seized her as she saw the precious ribbon dangling from her father's hand, held in the finger tips as though the very contact defiled him. She lifted fierce eyes toward his own, hot protest upon her lips, but the habit of a life long obedience is not readily downed. His trembling forefinger indicated the slippers, while his lips opened and moistened his lips with the tip of his tongue but still the voice was the same with suppressed passion as he commanded her to remove the offending slippers.

Large Civic Club Fly
Traps Are Being Placed at Many Grocery Stores
Mrs. Robert Hatfield Irons, chairman of the fly-swatting contest, has placed this week some of the large Civic Club fly traps. These traps will not count toward the prizes offered, but will add immensely in civil cleanliness and health.

S. S. Pomeroy, in Market Square, and A. H. Kreidler and Brothers, in North Second street, have taken traps. At Hull Brothers' butcher shop, 1718 North Third street, and at Slabach's butcher and grocery place, 226 Chestnut street, traps have also been installed.
One early fly, if left alive with its descendants is the progenitor in one single season of 100,000,000,000,000, 000,000,000—and these flies could cover the earth to a depth of 47 feet! Tis well that cleanly housewives and active children get after the typhoid fly which is more deadly than any lion or tiger.
