Williams approached. He was cold and passionless now. There was no time, but he could not forego looking at his work. He touched the hand, drawing away quickly as rigor mortis tautened the tendons of it. Cooly he picked up the package of securities which had dropped from the financier's pocket, turning them over curiously as though they were the most important things in the world to him. They fell from his hands as the squirmings of the bound watchman reached his ears. Snatching the bundle of money from his own pocket he drepped it beside the securities, then turned and fled.

After considering several favorable propositions to locate in other cities and towns in the automobile belt, the Briscoe Motor Company announces the consummation of plans which have been under discussion for some months, by which the company will build extensive automobile factories in Wildwood avenue, Jackson, Micmigan and establish an industrial community west of the city.

Two farms, one the Murphy farm on the north side of Wildwood avenue and the other the Horning farm, south of the Murphy land and extending from Wildwood avenue to the Michigan Central right-of-way, have been purchased. On the Horning farm it is intended to erect, adjacent to the Michigan Central tracks, the company's main factory and other buildings eventually covering from ten to fifteen acres. A two-story structure 250 by 300 feet will be begun within 30 days and in addition to this there will be testing buildings, laboratories, Aside from the land purchased for Zaside from the land purchased for the actual manufacturing needs of the Briscoe Company, there have been other large ground purchases on the north side of Wildwood avenue which will be laid out as a high-grade subdivision with wide avenues and several parks.

Benjamin Briscoe, President of the Company bearing his name, has for years been an apostle of co-operation and it is his intention to found a trade school in Jackson where young men will be taught the automobile building trades, mechanical drawing, metallurgy, etc., and where lectures on general educational lines will be given. It is expected that several thousand men will be employed on the properties purchased.

Flo's Brother Captured by the Police.

Flo's Brother Captured by the Police.

A series of flat robberies punctuated his flight. The net was closing in upon him. There was a wild comingling of desperate fear and joy as he know finally he was under suspicion for these lesser crimes. He knew when caught he would put up a fight. He could not understand it, for prison was what he craved, the immurement from horrible voices, sounds, lights. But he knew he would resist by reason of the same impulse that impelled his thefts, whereby he sustained existence when he would have preferred death.

And then it came. He had not bungled the job. He had felt in advance that he was about to be caught. The plant had been laid for him by the police. His pal had been a stool pigeon. The whole robbery had been mapped out at headquarters and he had played squarely into their hands. But the instinct for flight had beaten them. Even as the steel injper touched his wrist he had fought, had wriggled desperately out of the plainclothes man's clutches. And he had fled, fled to the only place he knew safety might lie.

Joseph Drum and his wife were silently seated in their living room one night. The haggard man burst in upon them. Since the tragedy they had been given much to silence. The fear that beset the cracksman had not neglected them—the fear and remores. Flo had caught a glimpse of her brother upon the street, and the face had haunted her since.

"They got me," Williams gasped.

"They're wise to me. They nicked me on the job."

Drum hurriedly snatched aside the portieres, tossing open the bedroom window and pointing toward the fire-escape.

"The fire-escape's good crisply." "The fire-escape's good crisply." "The fire-escape's good

"Hide in here," he commanded crisply. "The fire-escape's good enough if they make a search—"

Williams laughed hoarsely, croak-

Williams laughed hoarsely, croakingly.

"There's no getaway for any of our gang," he muttered, then, his voice growing clearer, something almost prophetic glowed in the bleary eyes; "no getaway for any or us. I can't help running, but to make a getaway. I can't—we can't."

"We left a trail a mile wide," he continued more quietly. "That pearl

"We left a trail a mile wide," he continued more quietly. "That pearl necklace, Joe! All the coin you've spent! What Fields knows! What everybody knows about your salary! They're alive—those clues, even if a fat coroner does go to sleep on the job. They had a clear case against Brown—and he was dead. But they gotta clear case against us, if they ever start. They ain't no getaway, They start. They ain't no getaway. They start. They ain't no getaway. They ain't—"

He halted, springing to his feet as the elevator cage clanged upon their floor and heavy steps, immediately followed by resounding blows upon the door, woke the echoes of the apartment house.

Crash—the door shivered, then slapped from its hinges before the heavy-shouldered pair who lunged into the room. Flo uttered a scream of warning as her brother drew his gun, but the wrist of him trembled helplessly in mid-air under the iron grip of the plain-clothes man.

"What did he mean—about clues?" she whispered fearfully to her husband, an hour later. "Did he mean we might—get caught—?"

Drum sighed heavily, staring at the opposite wall with an expression in his eyes that showed he was looking far beyond that wall.

"What was he running—from—always?" she persisted, dully, "The verdict cleared—everything—so far as any chance of being—caught was—concerned. Why did he run, Joe?"

"Not from man." His voice was leaden. "From the arrows of the Almighty he ran. Haven't you felt them, Flo?"

She shivered, wishing she might meet his eyes—knowing their eyes could never meet as of old.
