Bottling of Fluid For Use in Acid Drinks Is Recommended by Many Housewives

A simple method of bottling the juice of grapefruit for use in making acid beverages is advocated by the department as a means of gaining a useful byproduct from hundreds of thousands of cases of grapefruit which now are wasted. An investigation was uadertaken at the urgent request of Florida grapefruit growers who reported that the market during the season would not take up a large propotion of the grapefruit crop, and asked the department to determine the possibility of utilizing the fruit or its juice in some profitable way.

All that is necessary, according to the boiling point in a porcelainlined or enameled kettle, pour it while still hot into bottles, which then are hermetically sealed. The juice when so handled will keep indefinitely, and provides a base for grapefruit-ade or of the fruit. Experiments show, however, that it is highly important that the bottle be completely filled so that no layer of air be left between the top of the juice and the cork or seal. Where air in any amount comes in contact with the top of the sterilized juice it will cause the juice to change its coin. In handling the fuice it is particularly important that it be kept from coming into contact with iron or other metals easily acted upon by acids.

The investigators found, also, that it acids.

The investigators found, also, that it was possible to freeze the grapefruit juice into solid ice and then, by whirling the ice in a centrifugal machine, to take out a large part of the water and leave the solids and flavoring matter of the fruit. This freezing and concentrating of the juice greatly reduces the bulk and makes a product which can be sterilized by heating and kept indefinitely. Care must be taken to keep the juice from coming in contact with iron.

Those who wish to make a clear juice may filter the grapefruit juice before it is heated by adding to it from 2 to 3 per cent. (about 3 ounces avoirdupent of the clear juice reheated and boiled. With the freezing process the juice is filtered after concentration, about twice the amount of infusorial or Fuller's earth being used per gallon of concentrate.

The chemists, in connection with this bottling of grapefruit juice, notify the public that the same process is not suitable for bottling the juice of oranges and lemons, which will not retain their flavor if handled in this way.

While as yet, as far as known, there way.

While as yet, as far as known, there is no commercial market for sterilized grapefruit juice, it is believed that many persons will find this juice, a pleasant variation from lemonade or limeade. Those who like grapefruit should find the beverage inviting. The method is so simple that those in regions where grapefruit are cheap and plentiful can prepare this product on a small scale with ordinary household appliances.
