The Love Liar

CONTINUED FROM YESTERDAY.

But David Dwight laughed also. For he had seen the sinister red of the skull and cross bones—the same vial he had seen in the Doctor's laboratory earlier in the day—upon the bottle from which his physician had been dropping a pale liquor into the ruby wine glass before the host's place. And he laughed—this man whose soul had been murdered by the pair below; he laughed although his face was composed, charmingly courteous in his manner as he received the guests already arriving.

Dwight Carrying His Wife to Her Room After She Had Fainted During a Feast of Torment.

And then she understood, understood even as the man she loved received the wine glass from the man to whom she was bound. The instinct to cry out aloud at a warning was upon her but she repressed it. She stared at Holland, fascinated. What could she do? There was a slight smile upon his lips but the smile was not spontaneous, not the one she loved.

She looked at Dwight, loathing him for the eager expression of the butcher upon his face as he watched the physician for some sign of a tremor. She turned away with a shudder, conscious that Holland was speaking. She could not catch the words. The tumult of her own heart bumped against her ribs was too great for that.

And suddenly she realized that she loathed this man too. Revenge—revenge—was that all man thought of, lived for, died for? The man she loved had been caught in his own trap and was merely showing himself a thoroughbred. And when he fell dead, who did they think was to pay for the scandal—who was to pay?

She half rose from her chair, even as the doctor's elbow crooked to sip at the wine. A second she remained there, she slumped heavily against the arm holding the bottle, and then closing in a feigned swoon. David Dwight's arms were about her, lifting her, carrying her to the library and the Municipal band played another program under the direction of the Harrisburg Band Concert Association.

So many autos collected in the concourse in the park that the handling of them kept the park authorities busy for awhile but order was easily maintained and the motoring parties good naturedly took their time in getting out of the space. Some regulation requiring the cars to park so as to face in one direction will likely be adopted.

The concert was splendid, the hand mixing up its regular program numbers with just the catchy kind of one-step stuff that sets Nos. 7 and 8 tingling the same as tiny pump and cloth-top.

TRUTHFUL ADVERTISING

The store of to-day has come to feel its position in a community and to realize the important duty it is being called upon to perform.

Its head is conscious of the ideals it must seek and what standards must be lived up to that it may endure; and particularly this is true where the written or spoken word affects the relationship between the store and its customers.

Wide-awake stores are striving earnestly to maintain Truth in Advertising, and few indeed, would publish a falsehood to purposely deceive!

The change from the method of years ago, came about with the diminishing feminine cry for bargains—always bargains; and with the increasing desire for quality rather than quantity.

Still clinging to memory are the days when merchandise could not be sold unless prices were "cut," (whether positive or apparent) and little wonder advertising ethics suffered.

The store "ad" is now a dependable shopping guide for the whole family.

Both men and women have learned to know the good and the real—in the word of style, quality or value (good bargains will always be offered). You believe in the store that believes in straightforward business principles; in the salesperson who has your personal wants at heart; and you have confidence in the advertising, because there is no need for exaggeration or misrepresentation.

Starting to-morrow, 10,000 and more advertising men from all parts of the world, will meet in Chicago to continue a crusade begun a few years ago against untruthful advertising, and it's to be hoped the effect will be far-reaching.

The time is not far distant when business in general will be brought to even a higher standard, and the unscrupulous store will be forced to abandon dishonest methods or pass out of existence.

Would-be-Suicide Spills Death Potion All Over His Face and Neck
The fact that "many a slip twixt the cup and the lip" probably saved the life of Roy Stingle, 1231 Wallace street, this morning when he attempted to commit suicide by drinking iodine, according to Harrisburg hospital authorities. Domestic troubles are said to have caused Stingle to try to end his life. But when he started to drink the poison, fate intervened and Stingle spilled most of the liquid on his face and neck.
