"Their Married Life"

Helen sat with a little account book before her, a pencil in her mouth and a forehead much wrinkled, in an effort to balance properly. The monthly accounts were always a hardship to Helen, who hated figures, but she had determined to manage as economically as possible and toiled faithfully with her book every time the bills came in.

She had the month's grocery bill before her. It seemed almost impossible that with such a small family so many things were necessary. When had they eaten all that fruit, and surely they had never eaten canned lobster. Helen thought faithfully, but could not recall any time that she had purchased canned lobster.

For one thing, Warren did not approve of canned meats or fish, and, besides, as she scanned the bill she discovered that there were more items of the same kind. Several cans of lobster, sardines, and some expensive cheese.

Nora had gone out and had taken Winifred. Helen was beginning to worry about Winifred. She had looked pale for several days, and Helen dreaded the hot weather. She wondered if Warren would approve of her taking Winifred away somewhere for the summer. She would be perfectly satisfied if they could go anywhere, just so long as it was cool and comfortable. Last year she had gone away with Warren on his vacation, but the two weeks were all that she had taken. Winifred had not been with them, and this year it was different.

Helen tried to decide whether to wait till Nora came in, or to go out to the store immediately to see what was the trouble. She finally decided to interview the Italian who kept the fruit and vegetable place near where she lived. She knew well the uselessness of trying to economize by trying a cheaper place to trade. Once last year they had changed places, and had at Warren's suggestion, carried home parcels to save a few pennies. She had discovered that it did not pay. Most of the stores where the price was less had fewer opportunities to deliver, and it was a nuisance.

The streets seemed hot and the children more prolific than ever. Helen felt a little uncomfortable as she noticed several people look at her closely. She had gone out without a coat, thinking it too hot to bother with one, and as her dress was charming it made her look more conspicuous than she wished.

She reached the store at last and, bill in hand, waited for some one to come up and ask what she wanted. The store was cool and permeated with the odor of fresh green vegetables and fruit. Wagnaf Helen remembered the variety at Colon and the smell of bananas and grain. She would never smell bananas again without thinking of that morning they landed in the tropics. Some one came up to her at that moment and asked what she wanted, and Helen professed her bill and asked what the items meant.

"I am sure I never bought them," she said, following the man to the desk, where he produced his book and proceeded to look up the contested items.

Helen had traded there for some time, and the man was obsequious and evidently ready to rectify any mistake.

"You did not send anyone else to the store, did you Mrs. Curtis?" he said. "This first item is plainly marked in the book. Look for yourself."

Helen satisfied herself that the man was speaking the truth. She had had a lurking feeling when she had come out that something was not quite right. It did not seem likely that so many mistakes would be made, and yet who could have bought the articles?

Nora was plainly puzzled, and decided to telephone home. Perhaps Nora had come in and would know about it. She stepped over to the telephone and a moment later had Nora on the wire.

"Nora, I am down at the fruit store. Do you know anything about any lobster charged on the bill? Or sardines?"

"You denied any knowledge, as Helen was sure she would. She would have suspected herself sooner than Nora."

"There must be some mistake," said Helen positively. "My maid did not purchase them, and I am sure I did not."

The man had discovered the other articles, plainly marked, and seemed a little uncertain as to how to proceed. "I'll let it go for a day or so," said Helen, finally. "You will surely find out the mistake, and you can let me know." She had felt like adding something about carelessness, but decided not to, in case she was to blame in any way.

At home she questioned Nora closely, showing her the bill, and the two tried to think out a possible solution to the puzzle. Altogether the bill came to over three dollars for the things that Helen was sure she had not bought. It was too much to pay for principle's sake, if nothing else, when she was sure that she had never bought them.

Warren's key in the latch came in the midst of the discussion, and Helen flew out to meet him. Nora called her the next moment, and she left him to hurry to the telephone.

"Oh, you did, well I was sure you would. Yes, course, the two names are alike. All right, fix up the bill and send it in again. Please be careful next time."

Well that was over at least.

Yes, dear, the bill at the fruit store," she said in response to Warren's inquiry. Lobster and things on the bill that I never bought."

"You would never had any trouble like that if you would stop this infernal charging," said Warren un sympathetically. "Some day you'll wake up to the fact that I was right, but I won't get any credit for it."

Another incident in this interesting series will appear on this page soon.

Civil War Veteran After 50 Years as Hermit Dies at Hagerstown Hospital

Hagerstown, Md., June 29.—Henry Graybill, aged 86 years, a Union veteran of the Civil War, who spent the last half century living the life of a hermit in South Mountain, died at the hospital in this city after an illness of five weeks. Graybill was found in his log cabin home in the mountain east of Edgemont partially helpless and sick and he was brought to the hospital for treatment. At the time a considerable sum of money was found in his bed and later it was learned that he had a big deposit in a bank in Waynesboro. Graybill had been receiving a pension of $30 a month from the government for a disability received during the war and he had saved nearly all of it. The aged veteran made a will before being brought to the hospital, but the contents of it are not known. His nearest relatives are cousins.

A PENNSYLVANIA WOMAN TESTIFIES

Back Hurt—Nervous—Sleepless. Cherry Tree, Pa.—"Eight years ago when my little girl was born I came near dying. When I got able to go about, my back hurt so when I would bend over that I would have to take hold of something with my hands to get up. My husband got me two bottles of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription, which I took and got along nicely. I could sit up, and my back did not hurt me. Was so nervous I could not sleep nights; my heart troubled me and my back had sharp, stinging pains when I would lean my head forward. I wrote to Dr. Pierce and was advised to take 'Favorite Prescription.' I used several bottles and now I do all my own work and tend to my garden and flowers. May God bless you is my prayer."—Mrs. ELLIS W. STIFFLER, Route 2, Box 85.

WITH GRACEFUL AND FASHIONABLE FLARE

A New Skirt that can be Made Plain or With Cuffs Finish.
By MAY MANTON

8628 Two- or Three-Piece Skirt for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 Years.

Flaring skirts and wide skirts make all-important features of the newest fashions. This one is designed for small women as well as for young girls. It is eminently graceful and of just the correct width and since it can be finished at either the natural or at the high waist line, it is adapted to all figures. In the largest view, it is shown with an upturned band or cuff on the lower edge and that finish is much liked. Here, the band is of contrasting material, but frequently the band matches the skirt and sometimes in place of being stitched, it is made over a crinoline foundation and blind stitched into place, there being no sewing visible on the outside. There are only two pieces of the skirt and the closing is made at the left seam. The model is a good one for summer materials, linen, pique, poplin, the cotton crepes and the like as well as for serge, gabardine and other fabrics for the present.

For the 16 year size will be needed 5 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 3 1/2 yds. 36, 2 1/2 yds. 44 or 54 in. wide, with 3/4 yd. 44 in. wide, for the band or cuff, and the belt.

The pattern 8628 is cut in sizes for 16 and 18 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.

PAXTANG PARK VAUDEVILLE

The vaudeville bill at the Paxtang Park Theater, this week, makes a first-class show in every respect. There is not an act in the bill that would not be acceptable as a part of any vaudeville show we have ever seen.

Madam Obera and her girls present an excellent and positive sensation as a spectacular production. It is probably the most beautiful offering ever presented on the park stage. The electrical effects are really wonderful, and last, but not least, the dancing done by Madam Obera and her girls has that grace and ease that is absolutely necessary to make this style of dancing a pleasing performance.

Billy Humphries, the musical mimic, gave a most unique performance, and had his share of applause from the very start. Mr. Humphries gives some wonderful vocal imitations of musical instruments and finishes with a whistling solo that is altogether pleasing.

The "Sins of the Mothers" is the latest canine performance in vaudeville. The intelligence displayed by the pretty little fox terriers defies description and can only be appreciated by those who see their performance. To any dog lover this act alone is worth the price of admission to the park playhouse.

Permane, the Italian wizard of the concertina, was the recipient of several well deserved encores for his efforts, while George Moore a comedy juggler, proved that even at this late day it is possible to create new feats in the art of jugglery.—Advertisement.

Morrow, who means the Noyes' business, Noyes visits Morrow and proves that there is a taint of negro blood in Morrow's veins. Morrow the prohibition bill, resigns as Governor and sacrifices his love to devote the rest of his life to the uplift of the negro.

To-morrow we present the fourth instalment of "The Goddess," in which Anita Stewart and James Williams are featured. On Thursday we will offer one of the greatest features we have ever shown at this popular theater, "The Sins of the Mothers." ### WHO SAID MOTORIST SHOULD BLOW HORN?

Question of Constable's Authority to Place "Trap" at Middletown in Dauphin County

Can a town constable erect a "blow-your-horn" sign where he pleases without authority of the town council, township supervisors or city commissioners or arrest the motorist who doesn't heed the warning?

The problem is now in the hands of Judge Charles Johnson, Union-Snyder district, sitting specially in the Dauphin county court to decide.

Judge Johnson slipped into town yesterday at noon and for an hour heard argument on the question in Judge McCarrell's chambers, the question having been raised by Attorneys John Fox Weiss and John R. Geyer, counsel for J. Clyde Myton, secretary of the Motor Club of Harrisburg who appealed for a new trial following his conviction in March quarter sessions for violating the Middletown auto speed laws. Attorney Weiss pointed out that the "blow-your-horn" signs were evidently erected by the constables on the edge of the town without any municipal authority, and he declared the establishing of such a "horn-trap" without permission of the municipal body was unconstitutional.
