much carelessness on the part of some farmers. Samples of milk known as "baby" milk and produced by two different farmers were among the worst brought into the place.

Dr. W. H. Ridge, milk hygiene expert of the State Livestock Sanitary Board; Dr. J. M. J. Raunick, city health officer; Dr. G. A. Zimmerman and Dr. William V. Hughes, city food inspectors, went to the plant at 5:30 o'clock this morning and from that time until 9 o'clock were engaged in taking samples of milk from farmers who sell their product there.

Use Lorenz Tester

Dr. Ridge took a Lorenz sediment tester with him and it was with this that the tests were made. A pint of milk from each can delivered by the farmers was put into the tester and then forced through an opening in which was a layer of cotton. The milk filtered through the cotton while the sediment remained on it. In the majority of cases the milk was fairly clean and the producers were commended by the inspectors. But then, too, there were some samples just opposite and the farmers were severely criticised for permitting milk with such filth in it to be sold. Two cases in particular interested the inspectors greatly and censure was forthcoming in both instances. The farmers when informed their milk was to be tested stated that their product would stand any inspection, as it was "baby" milk and produced under the most sanitary conditions. The test showed, however, that the milk contained more dirt and other sediment than much of that which is not produced solely for babies. "Baby" milk is milk procured from healthy cows and milked in places where little dirt is able to reach the cans. It is then strained thoroughly so that no sediment or dirt of any kind can get into the containers. The two farmers who called their milk "baby" milk did not produce it under the best conditions, as the tests showed it was full of dirt.
