CAN BUILD COMFORT STATIONS ELSEWHERE

W. H. Lynch yesterday by City Solicitor D. S. Seitz. The construction of the public comfort station has been ordered for the proposed 'Isle of Safety.'

More than a week ago J. R. Bibbins, representative of Bion J. Arnold, Chicago, municipal architectural engineer, visited this city at the instance of the Municipal League and looked into the public comfort station and 'isle of safety' problem.

Mr. McFarland Asks Opinion In order to be fully informed on the whole situation Mr. Bibbins asked J. McFarland, secretary of the Municipal League for official information relative to the city's rights in the Square insofar as the construction of a public comfort station and 'isle of safety' is concerned.

The League secretary asked Mr. Lynch to procure a legal opinion on the question from Mr. Seitz and the city engineer. Mr. Seitz in effect said that the construction both of the improvements under the legislative act of 1913 as it controls the streets. The act that ordinance authorizing the 'isle of safety' would indicate, Mr. Seitz thinks, that more than one public comfort station could be erected if the money held out.

Mr. Seitz's opinion in full on the subject: "Mr. William H. Lynch, Supt., Harrisburg, Pa. "Dear Sir: "Your inquiry of 18th instant, relating to the city's control over Market Square 'above ground or under ground,' and the status of the public 'isle of safety' and public comfort station in Market Square, received and considered. In answer thereto, I beg to submit the following:

"In pursuance of a public proposal made by John Harris on March 3, 1874, commissioners laid out, inter alia, Market Square, Market street and Second street, prepared and filed plan and specifications with a written report 'of their doing,' April 14, 1875. This plan was not recorded and became lost.

"The City's Appeal "In the case of Harrisburg's appeal (the Market House case) Judge Simonton held, and was affirmed by the Supreme Court, that Second street and Market street had not become merged into the Square, but passed through it and retained their identity as streets from one end to the other as described in the deed of John Harris and wife dated July 6, 1875.

"The Status of the Loan "The public loan of 1913 authorizes a bond issue of $25,000 for a footwalk on Market Square and for comfort stations. This money was made use of deliberately, for (first) a footwalk or 'isle of safety' in the Square, and (second) a public comfort station. The 'isle of safety' is not known in the law as a public improvement, therefore 'footwalk' was chosen as the proper word. The words 'comfort stations' were placed after the words 'Market Square' so that these conveniences could be constructed either in the Square or elsewhere as might be deemed proper, and the plural number was used so that more than one could be constructed if the money would be sufficient. I believe that the courts would construe Market Square as used in the ordinance authorizing these improvements to mean anywhere within the space occupied by Second street, Market street, or the Square proper, speaking technically, provided said footwalk or 'isle of safety' would not unreasonably interfere with vehicular travel—for it is my opinion that the Council used the term 'Market Square' as meaning the entire Square, and not in its restricted sense as defined by Judge Simonton in the opinion above referred to."
