Leroy B. C. Delaney Here on Some Legal Business

LeRoy B. C. Delaney, of Washington, D. C., son of the late Captain John C. Delaney, is in the city on legal business. Mr. Delaney has recently been to Mexico City and was there when the Carranzistas captured the city in January from Zapatas. He saw many persons killed and wounded that day by the soldiers of General Obregon of the Carranzista party. Mr. Delaney wrote articles for the New York American on the situation in Mexico. He says that anarchy exists in all Mexico and the only solution is intervention by the United States government.

Mr. Delaney represents corporations holding big interests in Mexican timber lands and is also connected with corporations furnishing foreign governments with supplies. He is making preparations for a trip abroad within a few days.

Mr. McFarland Asks Opinion

In order to be fully informed on the whole situation Mr. Bibbins asked J. Horace McFarland, secretary of the Municipal League for official information relative to the city's rights in the Square insofar as the construction of a public comfort station and Isle of safety are concerned and of the exact status of the 1913 ordinance. Mr. Bibbins was anxious to know particularly whether the 1913 loan ordinance would permit the construction of a station anywhere else than in the Square.

The League secretary asked Mr. Lynch to procure a legal opinion on the question from Mr. Seitz and the city compiled. His views in effect are that the construction of the improvements under the legislative act of 1913 as it controls the streets. The fact that ordinance authorizing the loan specifies "stations" would indicate that the city has more than one public comfort station could be erected if the money held out.

Mr. Seitz's Opinion

Following is Mr. Seitz's opinion in full on the subject:

"Mr. William H. Lynch, Supt., Harrisburg, Pa.

"Dear Sir:

Your inquiry of 18th instant, relating to the city's control of Market Square 'above ground or under ground,' and the status of the public loan of 1913 with reference to the Isle of safety and public comfort station in Market Square, received and considered. In answer thereto, I beg to submit the following:

"In pursuance of a public proposal made by John Harris on March 8, 1784, commissioners laid out, in the area, Market Square, Market street and Second street, prepared and filed a plan thereof, together with a written report of their doings, April 14, 1785. This plan was not recorded and became lost.

"The City's Appeal

"In the case of City of Harrisburg's appeal (the retained case) Judge Simonon held, and was affirmed by the Supreme Court, that Second street and Market street had not become merged into the Square, but passed through it and retained their identity as streets from one end to the other as described in the deed of John Harris and wife dated July 6, 1785. Market Square therefore is the space between the buildings fronting Blackberry street to Strawberry street outside of Second and Market streets intersecting at right angles in the center of said Square. The whole space, including said streets, is a public highway over which the city has the same control that it has over any other public highway. The act of June 27, 1913, authorized the construction of a public comfort station and Isle of safety in the Square, and therefore the city authorities may construct such conveniences in said highway, with the implied limitation that they shall not unreasonably interfere with public travel. The city may also construct a footwalk, 'Isle of safety,' in said highway, for the exclusive use of pedestrians.

"The public loan of 1913 authorizes a bond issue of $25,000 for a footwalk on Market Square and for comfort stations. This language was made use of deliberately for (first) a footwalk or 'Isle of safety' in the Square. The phrase 'Isle of safety' is not known in the law as a public improvement, therefore 'footwalk' was chosen as the proper word. The words 'comfort stations' were placed after the words 'Market Square' so that these conveniences could be constructed either in the Square or elsewhere as might be deemed proper, and the plural number was used so that more than one could be constructed if the money would be sufficient. I believe that the courts would construe Market Square as used in the ordinance authorizing these improvements to mean anywhere within the space occupied by Second street, Market street, or the Square proper, speaking technically—provided said footwalk or 'Isle of safety' would not unreasonably interfere with vehicular travel—for it is my opinion that the Councils used the term 'Market Square' as meaning the entire Square, and not in its restricted sense as defined by Judge Simonon in the opinion above referred to."

W. H. Lynch yesterday by City Solicitor D. S. Seitz.

The construction of the public comfort station had been talked of for the Square since 1913 in connection with the proposed "Isle of Safety."

More than a week ago J. R. Bibbins, a representative of Bion J. Arnold, Chicago, municipal architectural engineer, visited the city in the instance of the Municipal League and looked into the public comfort station and Isle of safety problem. The "Isle" as has been planned provided for the centralization of the trolley traffic in the Square around this "safety" point. Naturally the traffic problems and traffic conditions required consideration.
