

MOTHER OF SCHOOL GIRL

Tells How Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Restored Her Daughter's Health.

Plover, Iowa.—"From a small child my 18 year old daughter had female weakness. I spoke to three doctors about it and they did not help her any. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound had been of great benefit to me, so I decided to have her give it a trial. She has taken five bottles of the Vegetable Compound according to directions on the bottle and she is cured of this trouble. She was all run down when she started taking the Compound and her periods did not come right. She was so poorly and weak that I often had to help her dress herself, but now she is regular and is growing strong and healthy."—Mrs. MARTIN HELVIG, Plover, Iowa.

Hundreds of such letters expressing gratitude for the good Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished are constantly being received, proving the reliability of this grand old remedy.

If you are ill do not drag along and continue to suffer day in and day out but at once take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, a woman's remedy for woman's ills.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Switzerland in America

Glacier National Park

Now that Switzerland is closed to the Tourist World, Glacier National Park, in Northwestern Montana, becomes the Mecca of those who love the rugged mountain scenery and outdoor life.

It is easy to reach Glacier Park, for the luxurious "Oriental Limited" train over the Burlington Route (C. E. & Q. R. R.) from Chicago takes one through to the very gates without change.

Within the Park comfortable quarters are to be had at Glacier Park Hotel and elsewhere; and the Glaciers, the lofty mountains, the crystal lakes filled with gamey trout; the atmosphere of brightness ruling everywhere, are never to be forgotten.

Those in charge of Glacier Park have seen to it that the cost of visiting and living there is not excessive and would like to send you some of our illustrated booklets which tell you all about it, and about the cost of going there and seeing all there is to see.

If you will give me your address, I will gladly send you copies, free of charge, and answer any questions about the Park that you may wish to ask. Wm. Austin, General Agent Passenger Dept., C. E. & Q. R. R. Co., 836 Chestnut St., Philadelphia.—Advertisement.

The fear that she herself would be placed in a questionable position in the eyes of her husband had outweighed her fears for his fidelity to her. Her trip to her mother, and her mother's reproach for her lack of faith had resolved her to tell all and stake her future happiness on his belief in her in the face of obviously incriminating circumstances. Now that she had whipped her cowering courage to a desperate, brave stand, and had made ready to stand or fall on the strength of his love for her—now came this filthy, gossipy scandal-monger with a tale, which, if it were true—and it was only too plausible—would reawaken in her her initial doubt of his fidelity, strengthened and endorsed a hundred fold. She tried to avoid, to beat down the persistent, menacing monster of doubt that assailed her, but found her efforts as impotent to stand it off, as unavailing as when, in a dream, she struggled to move her stricken, unresponsive limbs and flee from some threatening terror. She could not fight it, neither could she flee from it.

VI.

In awaking that morning, Norris was again visited with his dread of the previous day, that Ethel should hear of Myra's installment in his cottage before he had an opportunity to tell her. This troubled him so, that he ate no breakfast, but hurried to his office, trusting the exactions of his business to take his mind from the annoying thought. He had a violent headache by 11 o'clock, and attributing it to the fact that he had neglected his breakfast, went to an early lunch. That was why, when Ethel called him at 11:30 he was out. His lunch gave him immediate relief, and he felt a thrill of confidence in himself and the rightness of things in general; an assurance, an optimistic outlook most of us have been wont to expect after a meal that leaves nothing in the way of food to be desired. He tried to analyze this sense of buoyancy as he walked along back to his office, and thought of the presumptuous conceit of Man in fancying himself fine, spiritual, aspiring, when, his material appetite satisfied, he turned urgently to the pursuit of "better" things. He was not allowed himself for a moment to grow misanthropic—a thing unfair to the beauty of the day—a thing unfair to those fine stirrings which perfection in any form—be it art, science, or religion, and he laughed his cynicism completely to rout.

He bought an "extra" from a newsboy, folded it carefully under his arm, and ascended to his office. As he threw the sheet on his desk it fell face upward, and the words "Attorney's Wife Is Co-respondent in Divorce Suit," staring out at him in big black type stretched clear across the page. Maybe it was some one he knew. He took the sheet up and carefully read the sub-headings: "Mrs. Willard Fall" ("Fall" he gasped) charges she found Mrs. Ray Norris and Mr. Fall embracing—

The sheet fell from his nerveless fingers and he swallowed hard a few times to moisten his throat and mouth, which had suddenly become dry. Then came a reaction from his nerveless realization; he felt a weak shaking throughout his whole body, and was conscious of his heart pulsing in great, uneven jumps. The monstrousness, the bold assurance of that staring type was incredible. It was hideous, foul. His wife and Fall! Why, they hardly knew one another! He tried to understand it—tried to put his thoughts in the same consecutive order he always had them when he pleaded a case in court. The effort was not successful, but he got sufficient control of his reason to look back broadly over the events of the last few days.

The one event that distinguished the last few days from a year of happy uneventful marriage was Ethel's insistence, hysterical demand to send Myra Foster away from his office. In explanation she had expressed an unwilling doubt, (a doubt nevertheless), that his relations with the girl were such as they should be. He knew his relations with Myra Foster were simple, honest, businesslike, and that thought, combined with his wife's suspicion, suggested to his indolently, but earnestly, that her suspicion of him might be but a blind for her relations with Fall. Good God, what a hideous thought! He picked up his phone receiver, clicked the hook nervously many times, and after what seemed an unusual wait, was connected with his home.

"Hello, Mrs. Norris, please. This is Mr. Norris."

"Mrs. Norris is not in, sir. She left full an hour and a half ago, and left word she had gone to the beach cottage. Yes, Good-bye."

She had gone to the beach—a place he could never prevail on her to visit! Why? Had she heard of Myra Foster being there? He knew gossip could travel as fast, and faster, than that. But, if she was using his relations with Myra Foster as a blind to cover her own affairs, (this damnable thought kept persisting), if she were, was it possible that she would have the temerity to seize on Myra's presence in the cottage as justification of a suspicion she knew to be false? He cursed himself for his vile suspicions. But she had gone to the beach!—if not for that, then for what?

The thought of Fall then entered his mind and took his whole attention, and he glanced hastily, searchingly across the court to see whether he was in his office. If the frightful thing were true—His lips met in a loathsome sear as he unlocked the bottom drawer of his desk and without locking hastily withdrew something and slipped it into his pocket. He rose, desperate, and leaving his office crossed to Fall's.
