The Pennsylvania Railroad 8.00 o'clock morning train from Harrisburg, arriving Philadelphia 10.30 A. M., with Philadelphia parlor car, was restored June 27th. This is the train that left Harrisburg at 7.30 under the old schedule. The new 8.00 o'clock leaving time will appeal to patrons of the Pennsylvania Railroad, particularly as it enables the business man to reach New York at 1.00 o'clock, just as early as was possible with the former 7.30 leaving time.—Advertisement.

POSTUM

—the pure food-drink.

It contains no caffeine or tannin (the coffee drugs)—nothing but the nourishing elements of whole wheat, roasted with a little wholesome molasses.

Postum comes in two forms: Postum Cereal—the original form—must be well boiled to bring out the flavour and food value—and Instant Postum—the soluble form—prepared in the cup with hot water instantly!

Grocers everywhere sell both kinds. They are equally delicious, and cost about the same per cup.

Most people can make good use of a strong body, clear brain and steady nerves.

answer a charge of murder he would be lynched when he reached the Palmetto State, were answered by the statement that South Carolina had not been the only Commonwealth to have mob violence and that in this case Brown was in no danger except from the electric chair when the Governor gave a hearing on the application for return of Brown to-day. The hearing occupied an hour and a half of which almost an hour was occupied in presentation of a plea for Brown, the Governor saying he would decide later and asking for briefs.

The Governor's desk was piled with letters and petitions asking that he refuse to return Brown, who is in the Philadelphia prison. He is accused of having killed a man in South Carolina April 14, 1906, and to have fled to Philadelphia where he lived without being charged with an offense until two years ago. A requisition was made for him and granted by Governor Tener. The case was fought through the United States courts and refused. Likened persons against sending the man away were made to Governor Brumbaugh who recalled the papers and reopened the case.

Prisoner's Wife Here
A number of colored people, including the prisoner's wife, came to the Capitol for the hearing. Deputy Attorneys General Keller and Davis sat with the Governor. G. Edward Dickerson, a colored lawyer of Philadelphia, ably presented Brown's case, declaring that he had been a good citizen in Philadelphia and that in his opinion he should not get farther than the Frank case as indicative of how people get stirred and said there were instances where the life of a colored man was at the will of a mob. Col. Knifer's remarks were cited to show the feeling and the lynching in an adjoining county to a railroad where the sheriff was killed was also referred to, while Mr. Dickerson said that not only was the execution of Brown made in an irregular way in Philadelphia by the man sent for him, but that if Brown went back it would be to certain death, saying that there would be no change of venue for him and where he was not acquitted before the law.

Some History Quoted
Attorney General H. Peebles, of South Carolina, and Prosecutor George Sell Timmerman, of Edgefield county, sat within a few feet of the colored lawyer as he assailed the sentiment of Southern States as conveyed by the Frank case as indicative of how people get stirred and said there were instances where the life of a colored man was at the will of a mob. Col. Knifer's remarks were cited to show the feeling and the lynching in an adjoining county to a railroad where the sheriff was killed was also referred to, while Mr. Dickerson said that not only was the execution of Brown made in an irregular way in Philadelphia by the man sent for him, but that if Brown went back it would be to certain death, saying that there would be no change of venue for him and where he was not acquitted before the law.

1980 Incandescents on New Store Front Will Help Light the "Square"

Nearly 2,000 additional incandescents will help to light the "Square" when the new illuminating system of the front of the Kaufman department store is completed. Finishing touches are being added to the interior of the building and while this is being done a host of workmen a corps of electricians of the Workmen Light and Power Company is fitting up the wiring arrangements for the exterior. Altogether there will be 1,980 electric lights on the front of the store building, including the outlining of the windows and the facilities for feature decorative lighting. The three big signs contain more than 600 globes. The roof sign is probably one of the largest single electric signs that has ever been set up in Harrisburg.

Two freight cars were required to haul the Kaufman and several other big electrical signs from the factories to this city. The other illuminated pieces are being set in place.

WHO PAYS?

Blue Blood and Yellow
By EDWIN BLISS

"Oh, come, father, she won't eat you. I want you to meet Miss Logan; she's been a great friend to me—has helped me wonderfully. I've spoken to her often of you."
And so it was settled. The boy always had his way.

Anita Logan, twenty-four, and her sister Bess, eighteen, were joint heirs to the great Logan fortune. Old John Logan, as he was known on the exchange, had been a banker of spectacular success, and had left behind him, two years ago, a fortune of fifty-two, two charming daughters and an enormous fortune. Bess was still away at school, and Anita was staying at the home. She was a beautiful girl, married only by her mistaken ideas of "class." Queer that a girl with such aristocratic ideas should be wooed by a bricklayer's son.

"Good evening, Ann." she bowed with mock obsequiousness.
"He ignored her absurd foolery, but felt a thrill he could hardly conceal at her evident pride in his appointment."

"This is my father, Ann. Father, Miss Anita Logan, who has been such a good friend to me."
"Oh, there he goes, being grateful again! I won't stand for it—not this evening." (Or any other, Paul thought.) "Excuse me, to meet you, Mr. Reed. You're also to be congratulated, I think."

Anita and Paul spoke of all things relative to Paul's work, his past struggles, his present appointment, his future hopes—spoke of everything but the one thing that made his heart pulse wildly, and fought for expression on his feverish lips. She saw his ardent passion; knew his love for her was struggling for expression, and tried to withdraw her sensitive, all too responsive soul from out the radius of his dangerous, delightful influence. He had said nothing pertinent as yet, but once their eyes met, held their souls in sweet, palpant suspense for a moment, and she knew too well before they were spoken, the words she at once hoped and feared would come.

"Yes, Paul."
"Oh, Ann, don't you know!"
She forcefully averted her eyes from his, afraid for the answer she knew she could not prevent them from speaking. She felt the call of his essential nobility, that patent lack of hood ring clear across the great social chasm that separated them, and knew all that was needed to bridge that yawning gulf was the responsive answer of her own being—an answer that would be an aristocrat's, and restricted, narrow vision kept her from giving.

"I love you, Ann. Love you, and thought you must know. Tomorrow I leave for the mountains. Tomorrow, and I will be back now. There will be plenty for me; two; we won't need any more. Oh! Ann, will you?"
She was by this time so confused, so torn between her desire to say "yes" and her conviction that she should not, that she welcomed the interruption made by Paul's father.
He had arisen, unable to bear the dignified magnificence of it any longer, and without a word of explanation or an "excuse me" had shuffled off to the left, and was gone, opening it up to the garden, and the Paul, distracted for a moment by his father's unmannerly exit, but his father's accounting for it, turned to Anita and laughed indulgently. But her struggling soul only needed this show of unmanliness, this patent lack of culture, this stiff, clumsy unreason in his father, to bolster its fast slipping conviction of class distinction. She was herself again in a moment, and when he turned to her for an answer, said:
"I'm not sure, Paul—I can't say now. You must give me time. I'll tell you when."
He was crushed for the moment, but brightened again, his youthful assurance making him feel that her ultimate answer could only be "yes."

She stood up, grave, thoughtful, and he followed. Taking up his hat, he held her hand in a brief momentary parting, and with a "good night" on his lips, turned, and followed his father out into the garden.
