—and you, Donald Porter, I hereby sentence to twenty years at hard labor.
How clearly those words stayed in his memory! It was all as though it had happened yesterday. The murky, smelly courtroom, the spectators, "pleasure" bent, the newshounds of the great dailies, the striving lawyers and the purblind judge. He had never been able to decide from that day to this whether the judge had been bought and paid for or no. What did it matter? The judge wasn't elementally responsible. How clearly he remembered every fluctuation of his own distract mind during that long trial. At first he could do nothing but laugh at the absurdity of it all. It concerned him at first only as a bothersome misunderstanding that robbed him of his precious time. Then, as the trial went along, as false witnesses were introduced, and things fixed for his railroad to prison, and he left with sudden horror his nearness to a punishment he didn't in the least deserve; he had become panicky at the grossness of the conspiracy against him. So cleverly had Cole lured the bank, so carefully had he planned it, that it had looked, at the trial as though he (Porter) had lured it and made Cole, its president, his innocent accomplice. Cole—As he thought that name, the ugly subtle lines of his face deepened, and his fingers twitched nervously, as though yearning for that soft throat they had once squeezed within their grasp. The day Cole's light sentence had ended, and he had walked jauntily amongst his fellow prisoners on his way to freedom, the guards had to be quick to save that throat from those yearning fingers. He had almost had him that time! Well, he would get him. He had told himself that time and time again.

The Convict's Fingers Closed About the Neck of the Man Who Had Tricked Him.

This thought, this unquenchable hate for the man who had so tricked him was the only thing that kept the life in his poor emaciated frame—the one thing that had enabled him to stand the frightful routine of prison life these long weary years. It was no wonder to Don Porter that he remembered it all so clearly as he did. The whole thing had had a daily rehearsal in his mind, and for years now he had awakened each morning to a fresh realization of the unspeakable horror of his position, and had gone to bed each night with a curse in his heart and on his lips for the man who had so tricked him—had so spoiled his life, and the lives of those few who had put their faith in him. He had been very good these past years. Oh, so good—all but that once. He had almost had him that time! That thought always gave him a moment's brief, phantom pleasure that always gave way again to despair; a despair that seemed duller, that the moment he had been touched by light. This despair was a despair that he should not live to be revenged. He had made a mad, insane attack on him then, but the guard was too quick. But that was fully five years ago, and he had been good since then—good with the goodness of a child who expects a reward—patient with the patience of a man who sees each day bring him nearer to his heart's desire. His heart's desire!

It seemed strange to him at odd moments that he who had always been gentle and sensitive, he who had always felt an instinctive kinship for things gentle and sensitive, should have for his heart's desire the death of another man. And yet it was so. It was so, and he was jealously glad of it. With the best years of his life scooped out, literally thrown away—freedom after his release held forth no promise to him—no promise but one. Had not the fulfillment of that promise seemed certain to him—had not the only thing that had kept him from that he would see Cole die at the hands of Don Porter, whom he had so wronged—had not this seemed a fitting and possible compensation for his injuries, he would never have left that prison alive—would have preferred death to the suspicious world he would have to face after those long years in prison. But with the possibility, nay the probability of attaining his desire before his time, the cold suspicious, unsympathetic world had not terrors for him. He would not try to rehabilitate himself. He wanted no favors of it. He wanted but one thing, and he was well able to get that himself. He had sworn it to himself. He would get that one thing.

That night, as usual he fell asleep with the name "Cole" framed on his inarticulate lips and a curse for it in his insatiable spirit.
II.
Edith Hilton had arrived at her 20th year. It would be difficult to say how she had arrived at her 20th year, unless one might say she zig-zagged to it. For Edith was like most of us, that queer admixture of decision and hesitancy that set her ever on of the analyzable "type" class, selected and labeled, and ever made her next act as uncertain as was the motive of her last.
Whatever quest for true Nature had endowed her mind with, it had certainly been governed by the Beautiful when it made her body, for she was of that perfection of physical beauty that makes most of us feel most respect an inner light, as the exquisite odor of cologne suggests a deliciousness of taste.
Her black hair, glossy and crisp, undulated in tiny waves down her white neck as though loath to leave a head of such delicate loveliness. Her warm brown eyes, pouting lips and slim, lithe figure, making an ensemble that her worldly wise mother treasured and counted on as their ultimate salvation from the awful impetuous prestige of their social position. It was a joke, that social position. Her husband, four years before, had died comparatively poor.

Chalmers "Six-48" Now Only $1550

A LIST of Chalmers Six-48 owners reads like the Blue Book of New York, or Boston, or Philadelphia, or Chicago.

Nearly half of all of this Model sold were bought in these four cities. Of course many of them were sold to discriminating motorists in all parts of the country because this car gave the highest quality and greatest value for anywhere near the price. But literally thousands of additional cars were bought by people who could afford to pay any price for their car.

Never Out of Commission

These thousands were more interested in the fact that the car always answered the roll call for service seven days in each week and each week of every month—than they were in the fact that this also meant freedom from expense at the garage or the repair shop.

How We Can Cut $375

And yet the question must be a natural one to you "Then why did you cut the price?"

Some motor car manufacturers cut prices in order to get rid of a car that won't sell on its quality merits.

We can cut the price on all of our cars because we are cutting down the cost of manufacture by a production nearly four times as large as ever before, by new labor-saving cost-reducing machinery.

We can cut more on the Six-48 than on the general line, because in addition to the general savings, we are able to include special saving because it is not a new model, hence, free from new tool and experimental expense.

Unexcelled Style and Beauty

Many of these thousands—particularly women—bought the car solely because it was a more beautiful car than they could get for the $4000 or $5000 they were willing to pay.

Best Motor Car Value Today

The same excellencies for which the thousands in Boston, New York, Philadelphia and Chicago selected this car, regardless of the price—are in the Chalmers Six-48 today, plus many others.

For it is exactly the same model structurally with added refinements in finish and equipment.

And yet you can buy the car today for $1550—they paid $1725 and $1925.

We believe that a car which appeals to the strictest connoisseurs of style and beauty in America and fulfills the utmost demands of the most money-wise motorists entitles us to claim that it is the best motor car value in America.

Will you investigate today?
