THOUSANDS OF LOST ARTICLES ON CARS

And the conductors and motormen do not believe that some of the lost articles are ever handed in at the office. In many cases these are found and returned to the owner who had forgotten them for a few minutes only and then returned for them.

But the variety of things brou-ht to J. S. Boas, claim agent, keep him gressing. Everything turned in, even if only one key, is registered in a book, together with the name of the finder, date and time found and the car on which it was found. When it is claimed the claimant's name is registered, together with the date that the article is returned. Of course the person who calls for a lost article must identify it before it is returned. A thirty-day limit is set on practically everything sent in, after which it is returned to the finder and his name registered the second time. In the case of valuables, money in bills and pocketbooks are kept in the company's vault for an indefinite time before they are given to the finder.

weather clears before the end of the day.

Owners calling for an umbrella tell, when and where they lost it, and usually describe it by saying that it has a long, plain black handle. Long black handles on umbrellas are the most common of those found, and sometimes a man or woman gets the wrong one, but does not discover the mistake. The real owner is the one who raises the fuss.

Here are a few of the many things Mr. Boas receives: Coins of all dates and countries, keys, bills ranging in denomination from one to ten dollars, school books of practically every grade novels, magazines, music rolls, tools, shoes, slippers, every namable article of clothing for men and women, many pieces just bought and still in pack, ages, gloves by the dozens, suit cases, jewelry (but none of the best), pock, etbooks (few well filled), lunch base kets, dinner pails and buckets, some iffilled with food and others with dirty dishes, picnic baskets, packages containing articles of all descriptions from old shoes to music, vegetables, bread, and last, but not least, umbrellas by the four distance of L. # The Spiritual and the Material

Man, by his very nature is religious. Religious, in that above all else, he holds something pre-eminent. Religion, in the strict sense, does not confine itself to the worship of God and His Son. A man may be just as religious in his devotion to other things.

The fact that so many men have replaced their exaltation of God with something material, is the reason why the churches of our Saviour send out a weekly appeal to you to partake in the services of the church held in His worship.

Obviously, the great work that confronts all churches is bringing men to see the vital importance of worshipping the true religion—the true ideal. The attitude of men needs to be changed from the material to

The first step, and one which most materially concerns you is church attendance. Until you take the initiative in this matter, the worship of true religion will not have found its greatest expression in your life.
