FIFTH ANNIVERSARY OF THEIR MARRIAGE

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haines Celebrate Wooden Wedding at Glendon Heights Cottage

Waynesboro, Pa., Aug. 14.—The wooden wedding anniversary of Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Haines, proprietors of Glendon Heights cottage, at Pen Mar, was celebrated last evening with a large dance and card party, attended by a hundred guests.

Bright huge lanterns decorated the large dining room cleared for dancing and the Wayne orchestra played throughout the evening. Lancers and the Virginia reel was featured as well as the later and popular dances. Cards on the porch were also enjoyed by some of the guests. Refreshments were served with a huge bride's cake as a feature of the decorative menu.

The festivities opened with the reading of an original poem written and read by Mrs. Anna Hamilton Wood of Harrisburg, a guest at the cottage, and then followed a mock marriage ceremony with the usual wedding marches, and a full bridal party. Among the gifts presented to Mr. and Mrs. Haines were chairs, trays, pictures and the like all suggestive of the wooden wedding.

Mrs. Wood's poem follows:

TO THE BRIDE AND GROOM
 One August day, now far away
 Of all five long years,
 Our Sally took a better half
 To dry her lonely tears.

They hastened down to Baltimore
 To tie the nuptial knot,
 And that warm day—that happy day—
 They never have forgot!

The groom was weak-kneed so he Tried
 To keep his chair and say
 The answers to the ritual
 Which pledged his life away!

They sat beside the restless sea
 And spooned and—oh, you know—
 Did all those foolish, silly things
 That lovers worship so.

The years have quickly sped around
 As years will always do,
 But Arthur Haines' family
 Still numbers only two.

But much parental love and pride
 Is lavished on their pet
 With drooping ears and stubby tail
 On which their heart is set.

Now all the guests at Glendon Heights
 Unite to wish them joy,
 And many, many wedding days
 To Sally and her boy!

Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Gilman of 141 North Thirteenth street, are taking a trip to Washington and Baltimore. Miss Lillie Bumbaugh, 1708 North Third street, has returned after a trip to Boston.

WHY PAY?

Toil and Tyranny

"And what does this mean, Perry?" she queried and in tones that compelled a prompt reply.

"These men are strikers. They must go. They won't work. We need the houses for others who will." His reply was jerky and stilling.

"But I thought these people had paid for their homes out of their wages," she persisted.

He remained silent, both to her question and to the insistent demands of Mrs. Shand, whose excitement and hysteria were growing with each passing moment.

"Answer me!" And Laura stamped her pretty feet and stilling.

"They are only partly paid for. The answer came slowly. "They are only partly paid for, and as they remain in your father's possession until entirely cleared, and as the men must take money and means to continue payment, we are foreclosing the mortgages. That is all."

"So you rob them of their homes. For shame! I'll stop that." And Laura shuddered indignation in every pose of her dainty little body, hurried away to find her father.

An hour passed—an hour freighted with frightful portent for the actors in the tragedy of toil and tyranny that is rapidly nearing its final curtain. In that hour Laura had found her father and with arms around his neck had begged him to have mercy.

"You must take pity on your poor toilers, father," she had pleaded and he had laughingly put her off. In that hour Mrs. Shand had stormed the meeting of the strikers in the hall and had, in an impassioned plea of crude eloquence, lashed them into a fury for revenge. In that hour Karl Hurd, a vow for vengeance in his soul, had left the body of his dead wife and gone to join the maddened strikers.

Though he did not yet realize it, David Powers, for the first time in his life, had reached a point where events were taking their course.

A higher hand than his was dealing the cards. Fate had taken part in the game. And so it happened at the very moment that his daughter Laura had decided to slip, from the hour and to down to the aid of the stricken families of her father's employers, the strikers themselves had decided to hold up her father's auto and give him the beating up that he felt he so richly deserved.

Skilfully Shand disposed his forces at a point of vantage in a turn of the road just beyond the Powers mansion. The men were armed with clubs, and at a point in the boulevard where they were hidden until the auto was almost upon them, logs were thrown across the highway. Hurd volunteered to act as lookout, and Shand, not knowing that the half-cracked and crazily stricken man had craftily stolen the revolver from his own side pocket, accepted his services. "Go up near the gate and signal us when the auto starts!" were his final instructions. And so the stage was set.

Slowly the limousine drew out from the Powers estate. The millionaire had drawn the shades to protect himself from the insults and gibes of his men on the streets and Laura had not bothered to raise them. Out onto the road the machine swung and had just gathered full momentum when the chauffeur's heart was turned to stone by the orange tongues of flame that leaped behind the trunk of a tree, by the ringing shot of a well aimed gun, by the crash of glass in the body of the car behind him, and by the mad maniacal peal of laughter that echoed wildly through the air.

That he should die through the afternoon noon shot, as he brot the auto into a quick turn he caught one glimpse at a pair of strangely staring, unhalloved eyes that peered at him from behind the trunk of the grand old tree.

David Powers was an influential man in the community where he lived. Police had guarded his palatial home all during the strike. They were near at hand when the shooting took place, and so it happened that the exulting, grinning murderer was quickly caught and was dragged into Powers' library while the agonized millionaire, still in the first burst of his grief, was bending over the cold, dead form of his beautiful martyred daughter.

"Do with me what you will. I have had my revenge! The world has one less tyrant to oppress it." Hurd shouted. And then his eyes fell upon Powers. He started as if he had seen a ghost.

"You," he muttered weakly. "You. I thought—"

And then his eyes traveled slowly to the beautiful form on the couch.

"And she was kind to me," he sobbed. "She gave my Betty money. She wanted to help us and I killed her."

The words seemed to arouse Powers. For the first time he became conscious that he was not alone.

"YOU!" he shouted in his turn.

His eyes blazed fury and he made one enervated leap at the mangled man before him. He would have killed the man with his bare hands had not the police and Travis restrained him.

And thus they stood a tragic group around the bier. And to each had been meted out his own appropriate punishment. Poor Laura had paid with her life. Travis had paid with loss of his fiancée—with the prospect of facing a blighted life until relieved by the death of Hurd. In his wild pursuit of revenge had paid by adding another sorrow, another remorse to his already overwhelming burden of woe. From David Powers had been exacted the greatest tribute of all. He paid with the life of his most precious possession—his daughter. For in the tragedy of Tyranny and Toil, as in the other great tragedies of life, the weak must pay as well as the strong, the innocent as well as the guilty.
