Under the direction of F. F. Ferree, superintendent of construction, a gang of workmen are clearing the conduits, testing the manhole connections and otherwise preparing for the laying of the cable all along the wall. Water was used to flush the conduits first to remove any earth or other obstructions.

The plan which the light company The plan which the light company has adopted to lay the thousands of feet of cable is odd but simple. What the electricians call a "blow devil" serves the purpose. This is a rubber ball that fits exactly but freely into the conduit. To it is attached a wire, and the rubber "devil" is blown through the pipe by air pressure. The cable will be drawn through the pipe eventually by means of the wire.

While the work of placing the standards is being pushed ahead excellent time is being made on the closing of the river gap at Market street in order that Commissioner W. H. Lynch can have that part of the wall finished for the celebration. Excavations were well under way to-day for a series of half a dozen or more stringers immediately south of Market street. The cofferdam for the next series will be started as soon as the first series are clear of water.

Planting on the new plaza in the rear of the water house will be started to-morrow, the guilles in the slopes along the water front caused by the recent heavy rains are being filled in by Commissioner Taylor, and the shrubbery in places is being trimmed. Before the big celebration Commissioner Taylor will have a corps of men go over the slopes again to make such additional trimming as might be necessary. Placing Stringers in Gap
