WOMEN AND THEIR INTERESTS

"Their Married Life"

Copyright by International News Service

They had been flying all day through the flat and monotonous country of Arizona. Contrasting with the picture-ness of New Mexico, with its red soil and marvelous sand formations, it had a desolate quality which got on Helen's nerves. There had been one spot which quite impressed their eyes as they passed this way. It was a pine-wood section surrounding Williams, which came as a relief, but they had passed through that all too soon and were once more on the desert.

Yesterday had been really exciting. At Albuquerque the train had stopped for an hour and Helen had all surrounded by Indians. Helen was enthusiastic about the picture and was easily induced to buy some things from the squaws. She saw Indian paposes with fat, round, expressionless faces strapped to their mothers' backs, and she bought an Indian doll for Winifred and some beaded Indian moccasins for Mary.

Nora had promised to visit. Mary while Helen was away. For Warren had decided to keep the apartment running after Mary, capable and rosy cheeks, and it was his duty to be honest and efforts to do the right thing.

Warren and Bob were in the smoking car, as usual, and Louise was taking a nap on the couch opposite. Helen looked at her wrist watch and the hands pointed to quarter of five. She decided to go out into the observation car for a little while, as the air was beginning to get stuffy.

Outside the air blew fresh and cool, and selecting a book from the "year-one" collection she took a seat. Helen settled herself on the observation platform and began to read. The book was impossible, however, and after carefully scanning ten or twelve pages she closed it and yawned and looked up eagerly. Why, where were they? How could they have reached so beautiful a spot without a warning of some kind? They had left the desert and were steaming into a mountainous district. The mountains were high, like Helen imagined the Rockies would be, and the country, instead of the arid, dust-baked land of Arizona, was green and beautiful.

Helen got up hurriedly and hastened back into the compartment. She shook Louise, who was still asleep. "Get up, dear," she said eagerly, and the wonderful place were in. I'm so excited I simply must have someone to talk to!"

Louise sat up and looked out of the window. The sun had set and took a closer view. "Where are we? We must have gone into Colorado, I wish the men were here."

Helen laughed excitedly. "I believe the train is slowing. You don't think we are actually going to stop, do you?" "I don't know," she said. "I am going to be ready to rush out for a run," and Louise hurried into her own room to freshen her toilet.

The train was certainly slowing up and was evidently going to stop. Helen looked out of the window again and saw long, low brick and concrete buildings which might have been a station, and yet looked like a hotel. There was nothing else in sight, and the mountains banked themselves in the background with the sun behind them. She and Louise rushed out into the corridor and met Bob and Warren. "Where are we?" they exclaimed together. "Where is this beautiful place?"

"I don't know," remarked Warren, "but come on, we'll go out and see." They hurried out and swung off the train. The conductor was standing on the gravel platform talking to some people, and Warren asked him a question on which he responded good-naturedly. They stood talking for some moments, much to the impatience of the others. Helen looked up and spelled out a Spanish sounding name over the picturesque building and by the time Warren came back was ready to ask a million questions.

"We are in California," he said, impressively, not waiting for her to begin. "This is a place called Barstow, see the California border line, and this building is a station with an excellent hotel attached."

"How long are we going to be here?" asked Louise eagerly. "That is the most part of it all. We are to be here an hour waiting for the San Francisco train which is late."

"And we'll have time to have our dinner here?" asked Warren. Warren nodded, and they went forward into the attractively furnished hotel. Helen returned to the station and there were flowers festively arranged at every table. There were very few people about, and the four made a merry meal.

After dinner they wandered out into the exchange, where the men paid the bill, and Helen selected a couple of the new books which were piled on the counter. "Now I'll have something to read," she remarked to Louise.

"On to Los Angeles." "We get to Los Angeles to-morrow." "In the night," Warren told me, so you won't see it till we come back." "Well, shall we go aboard?" said Bob, sure you've seen enough?" "Great to go aboard again?" great to walk on solid earth again?" "Oh, say, you sound as though we have been at sea for days," scoffed Warren.

"What do you say to a little game of cards?" asked Bob. "Great; wait till I buy some of those apples," and Warren ran back to the station and returned in a few minutes with a huge bag. "We've just had dinner, though," remarked Warren. "You certainly are a gourmand," Warren, you certainly are a gourmand," "It isn't because I'm hungry," defended Warren. "It's just for the fun of eating. Come on, I'll warrant that you'll all crowd down one at least, or I am very much mistaken."

IN THE NEW EMPIRE STYLE

A Smart Costume with Empire Waist and Full Skirt.

By MAY MANTON

8613 Bolero Costume for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years.

It is doubtful if there is any feature of the Spring more interesting than the combination of the Empire waist line with the wide skirt. Here is a frock adapted to small women and to young girls which shows that feature and also a bolero that is essentially youthful in effect, generally becoming and altogether attractive. Here the bolero and the skirt are made of a pretty flowered taffeta of the new chiffon sort and the blouse is of crepe de chine, but one can think of many ways in which the design could be copied. It seems perfectly adapted to the lovely embroidered cotton crepes and cotton voiles which are shown in such enticing variety; it would be beautiful made up in any one of the season's silk crepes, it is charming in taffeta and would be extremely handsome made of the fashionable faille or of soft poplin. For the simple afternoon frock, silk and wool crepe would be handsome, with the guimpe of crepe de chine, of net or chiffon or of a lingerie material. The neck finish allows of a choice of a stock collar or of a rolling collar and the sleeves can be in full or in three-quarter length and the skirt cut in two or in three pieces as desirable.

For the 16 year size will be required 5 3/4 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 3 3/4 yds. 36, 3/4 yd. 44, for the bolero and skirt, with 2 yds. 27, 1 1/2 yds. 36, 1 yd. 44, for the folds; 3 yds. 27, 2 yds. 36, 1 1/2 yds. 44, for the blouse.

The pattern 8613 is cut in sizes 16 and 18 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.
