Early the next morning they were boarding a trolley on the way to the Fair Grounds. It was an ideal day, or at least would be when the sun came out. Helen could not understand the San Francisco climate and Warren corrected her when she rushed to the window as soon as she had awakened and exclaimed disappointedly that the day was horrid.

"Wait till later," Warren had said laughingly.

"What do you mean, dear?"

"Why, the sun never comes out till late because of the heavy fog from the sea. You mark my words, we'll have plenty of fun long about eleven."

And sure enough, the sun came out later after they had been admitted to the grounds and were on a tour of exploration.

They reached the Exposition grounds east of 9 o'clock. Warren paid the admission fee and as they entered, the green and terra cotta roofs and domes of the various buildings were swathed in a rosy mist that gave promise of a sun somewhere in hiding.

The effect was almost fairy-like, and involuntarily Helen thought of many-towered Camelot and almost expected to see King Arthur and the Knights of the Round Table come riding by in pomp and splendor. It did, indeed, look very much like a dream city and it wasn't until they were fairly within the gates and had hailed two of the little basket carriages that were run by motors that the vision was dispelled.

The gorgeous lay-out of the grounds was, in itself, almost overpowering. The buildings, everywhere very elaborate and the entire effect so costly that Helen gasped at the wonder of it.

The Tower of Jewels lay against the wall of mist with its minaretted top lost to view. Later it would sparkle with a million of jewels when the sun sparkled on it, but now it loomed eerie and very mysterious. The little basket cars one worked without a guide, and after Warren had become somewhat accustomed to his they skinned along with some velocity. Bob manipulated his directly behind them and they decided to make a tour of the outer paths, working gradually toward the center.

They stopped for a time across the lagoon from the Palace of Fine Arts. The building, with its straight, marble pillars, and crown crowned with a strange figure, fascinated Helen. The entire thing was reflected in the water, and as there was not a breath of air the effect was one of romance.

"I have to pinch myself every few minutes to see if I am really alive," said Helen, awe in her voice.

"Did you ever think so beautiful as that white bulk across the water?" said Louise, softly.

"I wonder what the figures represent," said Bob.

The figures were women with their backs turned and leaning on their arms. It was a pretty piece of sculpture and an odd theme, but it enhanced the beauty of the place, which the party hated to leave.

"There is so much to see, though," said Helen. "We shall have to see the outsidess first and then come back at our leisure to go through them."

"All right," said Warren, who rather hated the idea of going through them anyway. He mentally decided to let the women do as they liked about it, but he for one would find something else to do at the time they selected to roam around interiors.

They rode slowly through the Court of the Universe and the Court of the Seasons. When they reached the Court of Abundance and had descended to examine some of the Maral decorations underneath the arcade, the sun came out and flooded the place with light.

"Now look at the Jeweled Tower," exclaimed Bob.

They all looked up, and where before there had been a cloud of mist, was now blue sky. The slender tower extended skyward into the blue, and the jewels sparkled with unearthly radiance in the strong light. The entire place seemed to be electrified, somehow, by the presence of the sun itself. The grass seemed very green and the colors so very intense.

"It's the atmosphere," exclaimed Warren at a remark from Louise. "It affects everything that way."

They had reached the Palace of Horticulture by twelve, and everyone was hungry. They lingered for a few moments by the building, and Helen remarked how the trees had been planted close to the walls so that they grew up like a border of verdure against the shining concrete.

"And the grounds, aren't they lovely?" she remarked. "I shall never get tired of just going around and around and looking at things over and over again. That's what I want to do. You and I can come back, if the men get tired, can't we, Louise?"

"Aren't you hungry?" suggested Warren prosaically.

"A little, but I hadn't thought of it before," she replied.

"Well, let's go back to that restaurant we passed, and this afternoon we can do the zone."

"Surely you have heard of that? Why it's the Coney Island of the fair—the place where they have all the queer things to do and see. Why, I wouldn't miss that on a bet."

"You make me wild with curiosity," said Louise. "It is really such fun."

"Is it? Well, you wait and see. Don't tell them anything about it, Bob."

"How do you people know so much about it?"

"I've read things," said Bob. "You women never read the papers."

"We do so," said Helen indignantly.

"Yes, the women's page."

"I read the war news," announced Louise.

"Not really?" mocked her husband. "Well here's the eating place; we'll go in and eat and then give you girls the time of your lives, eh, Warren? Maybe we can't do it, too; well, just wait."

To the Merit of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound during Change of Life.

Westbrook, Me. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and had pains in my back and side and was so weak I could hardly do my housework. I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and it has done me a lot of good. I will recommend your medicine to my friends and give you permission to publish my testimonial." — Mrs. LAWRENCE MARTIN, 12 King St., Westbrook, Maine.

Manston, Wis. — "At the Change of Life I suffered with pains in my back and loins until I could not stand. I also had night-sweats so that the sheets would be wet. I tried other medicine but got no relief. After taking one bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound I began to improve and I continued its use for six months. The pains left me, the night-sweats and hot flashes grew less, and in one year I was a different woman. I know I have to thank you for my continued good health ever since." — Mrs. M. J. BROWNELL, Manston, Wis.

The success of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, is unparalleled in such cases.

A NEW FROCK WITH BODICE AND SKIRT IN ONE
A Smart Model That is Simplicity Itself.
By MAY MANTON

8742 One-Piece Dress for Misses and Small Women, 16 and 18 years.

Girls who are on the outlook for something really new for the late summer or for between seasons will find this dress exactly suited to their needs. It is made with bodice and skirt in one, it is drawn on over the head after the midday fashion and the belt is buttoned into place. It is exceedingly simple to make, takes the rewest and smartest lines and it is essentially youthful in effect. The skirt portion is shaped to provide the fashionable flare and there are tucks in the bodice that mean becoming fullness. The neck can be finished with a chemise and rolling collar or with a plain shield with low neck. In the picture, the dress is made of blue cotton gabardine with trimming of white, but the model will be found a good one for serge and for wool materials of the sort as well as for the washable ones, although linen, galatea and the like will be worn throughout the autumn.

For the 16 year size will be required 6 1/2 yds. of material 27 in. wide, 5 1/2 yds. 36 1/2 yds. 44, with 3/4 yd. 27 for the shield 3/4 yd. for the bands and trimming.

The pattern No. 8742 is cut in sizes for 16 and 18 years. It will be mailed to any address by the Fashion Department of this paper, on receipt of ten cents.
