THE TIE THAT BINDS

Last summer two Southern strangers were leaning over the railing near Grant's tomb on Riverside Drive in New York City as the Daniel Drive moved silently and majestically upriver on her night's run to Albany.

"That don't look like no steamboat to me," said one, "it ain't a steamboat without niggers and cotton."

"Stranger," said the other man, with tears in his eyes, "I want to shake hands with you. The Great River in the September World's Work."
