Everything you might expect to find—and more; for the various Ready-to-Wear Departments are unusually well equipped with new Autumn fashions at this early moment; most positive endorsement of which are the kindly comments by women who are well versed in style.

Women Are Assured of a Smart Suit at a Moderate Price

We are desirous of having you know of the splendid suits to be had at very reasonable prices. Many have the ear marks of finer grade suits which are also featured; for instance:

A semi-military effect in navy serge with field mouse collar and cuffs; at $17.50. Or

A navy poplin in strict military style, with braids and velvet collar, at $19.50.

Striking wool mixture in plain tailored style comes at $18.50.

African brown broadcloth heavily braided in true military style, cluster buttons and fur collar, $22.50.

Navy serge with tab collar of blue velvet and velvet buttons, $22.50.

No Prettier Assemblage of Millinery Can Be Found Anywhere

The Bowman Millinery Shop ranks first in presenting advanced fashions. Here you can depend upon being shown correct styles of the moment, for only the word of authentic designers are accepted.

Excepting scarcely a day during the coming fore-season, new effects will be introduced to add flavor and variety to already large assortments.

The last to arrive is a chic, little Turkish turban with two metallic mushrooms the sole trimming.

"Castle Red" lately introduced is finding much favor. It's rather daring, but utterly stylish.

Untrimmed shapes are shown in abundance, and it's well to remember that Bowman prices are decidedly moderate.

COLLECTING TOURIST LOANS

By Frederic J. Haskin

$1,000 intended for someone else, made no effort to trace its source but spent it freely. When the mistake was discovered it took some months to locate him in this country but he has been brought to account and is now repaying the money in monthly instalments.

Considerable Loss Experienced

Considerable loss has been experienced in the immediate exchange of American and German money. Until the time of the war a German mark was valued at 24 cents of American money. To facilitate exchange, the relief agents gave it the value of a quarter of a dollar, so that the ing music student in Berlin received but 4,000 marks instead of 4,185 which ordinarily would have been the equivalent for the $1,000. In later transactions, the mark materially decreased in value and is still depreciating so that now it is only worth about 19 cents.

The handling of funds for private individuals, which continued from August of last year until May 6, 1915, added heavily to the work of the Treasury, yet these funds represented a much smaller sum than that which Uncle Sam took out of his own pocket to lend to those brought to unexpected need.

Each of these direct loans was made upon a promissory note signed by the borrower but with no other guarantee than his own personal honor. Many of these notes have been met promptly. Others are being paid in instalments suited to the means of the borrower.

A few persons have shown a disposition to evade their obligation but John Burke, United States Treasurer, takes great pleasure in the fact that honesty seems an inborn trait in most American citizens.

Small Security Asked

Of the $2,500,000 provided by Congress it is not yet known how much was distributed. It has been placed in the hands of consular agents all over Europe. Whenever a loan is made to an American he is required to sign a promissory note and give his American address. No other security is asked. It is not a strict way of doing business but Uncle Sam wanted his folks to come home.

The consular officers forward the notes to Washington. So far about $600,000 in these notes has reached the capital. On those notes $270,000 has been paid. Much more than half of them remain unpaid a year after the emergency arose. For a long time the Treasury was receiving money on them at the rate of $500 a day. Now it is coming in only at the rate of $100 a day, having materially slowed up.

Three difficulties are most in the way of the collection of this money. Many of its recipients cannot be found. Many others state that, at the time of receiving the money, it was not their understanding that it was to be returned. Many are in financial straits and unable to pay.

The payment of these loans in some instances involves considerable hardship. Many of the stranded tourists were teachers and other small salaried people who had saved money for years for the purpose of making the European trip which had been planned as economically as possible. In most instances round trip tickets had been purchased, but it was rarely possible to use them in getting back home. So the expenses caused by the war often amounted to almost if not quite as much as the sum provided for the entire trip. Yet the indebtedness is being paid off slowly but surely, sometimes in instalments as small as a single dollar. None of the notes will be cancelled except upon their payment and the government will steadily proceed in its attempts to collect them.

All Brought to Account

Some individuals have shown a disposition to evade payment of the loans, but they are likely to be dealt with summarily. Several persons who gave fictitious addresses in Europe have been located through special investigations. As each note was received from Europe a communication was sent to its maker giving notification of the fact that it was in possession of the United States Treasury. In many instances prompt replies were received proposing a method of payment. Several borrowers remitted their loans to the Treasury before their notes had been received from Europe.

When the address given upon the note was found to be incorrect, the co-operation of the Post Office Department has been asked and hundreds have been straightened out. Mistakes in many cases were unintentional. A few persons who evidently had intended to evade payment, upon being located, were induced to arrange terms of settlement.

Borrowers Unheard From

Despite Treasurer Burke's supreme optimism, there is still a large percentage of borrowers who have made no effort toward repaying the loans from the government. The Attorney General has been asked to make preliminary examination preparatory to legal proceedings. No suit yet has been brought and the United States Government will not distress any delinquent who acknowledges his obligation but those who are able to pay will be compelled to do so.

The clerical work in connection with these notes is tremendous. Sometimes several notes were given by the same individual. For instance, a note might be given in Berlin for funds sufficient to meet certain obligations and take the tourist to Paris. A second might be given there and perhaps a third in London to pay for the passage to America. There necessarily is considerable delay in securing these notes from the offices abroad as in many instances the consuls are without sufficient clerical assistance and the account of an individual cannot be closed until all his notes are presented.

The details of this great emergency loan business, involving the handling of over $5,000,000 in comparatively small sums, include many incidents of both humor and pathos. Few of these will ever be made public. Persons not entitled to receive aid frequently presented themselves with flimsy claims. The utmost vigilance was required to prevent fraud. At the same time the generous spirit which provided the funds aided its distribution so that prompt relief was rendered to urgent need even in cases of possible doubt. Even though the government should lose a considerable part of its advances, the loss would be considered insignificant in proportion to the value of the service rendered, and the avoidance of possible complications that might have arisen with large numbers of stranded Americans in the war zone.
