

UHLER DISCUSSES STATE HIGHWAYS

Chief Engineer Tells Congress of Road Men How Pennsylvania Is Meeting Problems

Oakland, Cal., Sept. 15.—"Resurfacing Old Roads" was the title of a paper presented to the Pan-American Road Congress at the morning session here to-day by William D. Uhler, chief engineer of the Pennsylvania State Highway Department, who is attending the Congress as a delegate representing Pennsylvania, appointed by Governor Brumbaugh.

Mr. Uhler asserted that the most important problem confronting road authorities to-day is the question of resurfacing old stone roads, which, as the result of neglect, have been permitted to deteriorate through to the foundation thus necessitating a large expenditure to rebuild them. He took the ground that skillful maintenance would reduce the amount of money necessary to keep these highways in good condition and would spread it over a period of years. He analyzed the causes which bring about decay of highways and emphasized the necessity of building roads which would meet traffic conditions, not only at the time they are constructed, but also in the years to come.

After explaining how a highway should be tested to determine the strength of its foundation and its drainage conditions, Mr. Uhler took up the various methods to be followed in the resurfacing of highways. He divided his paper into three subdivisions.

First—Water-bound and bituminous macadam.
Second—Bituminous-concrete and sheet asphalt.
Third—Vitrified or other block pavements.

In preparing a water-bound or bituminous macadam road for resurfacing, the speaker said that care should be taken to have it thoroughly cleaned and the existing surface broken up with picks so that the new material will bind properly with the old surface when applied. He described in detail the manner in which the stone and binder should be applied to the road and warned against common errors in the rolling and spreading of screenings on the newly made surface.

Mr. Uhler favored the laying of bituminous concrete and sheet asphalt pavements on a concrete base instead of on the old existing macadam foundation. He said that while this would prove slightly more expensive, it would give better results. After the concrete base had hardened, he recommended a paint coat of asphaltic cement and commercial naphtha, as a cut-back mixture, to secure a better bond between the concrete base and the bituminous top.

Mr. Uhler concluded his paper with a recapitulation of several points wherein he wanted to make what he said to avoid. He said that in the resurfacing of water-bound macadam roads, the common tendency was the use of too small a stone, which, while it would require less rolling, would not stand the motor traffic of to-day.
