The Pattern for this Design Besides Allowing for All Seams, Gives the True Basting Line and shows Diagrams for Cutting and Making.

Bu MAY MANTON

8779 Tucked Blouse, 34 to 40 bust.

Women who like to make their own ouses will be sure to welcome this degn. It is a very new and attractive one Women who like to make their own blouses will be sure to welcome this design. It is a very new and attractive one and also the improved pattern shows new features. The perfect basting line is clearly defined and at the same time, seams are allowed. Each piece is stamped with a letter for identification, and with the pattern are accompanying illustrations showing how to make and how to cut, and as a result, the problem of dressmaking is reduced to the simplest possible proportions. The blouse is charming made of the crêpe de chine from any tub silk, from taffeta, from cotton voile or any similar material. Here, it is made of cotton voile in a shade of light blue matching one of the tones of the plaid skirt with which it is worn. The front edges are hemmed and the tucks are sewed on indicating lines, so that it is only necessary to gather the blouse portion and join it to the yoke and sew up the under-arm seams. The sleeves that are plain at the shoulders and finished with flaring cuffs, are exceedingly smart.

In Starting With Poultry Now Select Only Matured Pullets

COPYRIG HT. 1915.

PARTRIDGE COCHIN BANTAMS

Twenty-four to twenty-six ounces for hens and 26 to 30 ounces for males are the standard weights on partridge cochin bantams. Contrast these with the standard partridge cochins, weighing 7 to 9½ pounds for females and 9 to 11 pounds for males, and you will see what selection in breeding will do for poultry.

Many professional and businessmen have as a hobby the breeding of these bantams and competition for prizes in the larger poultry shows is keen. They make attractive pets, requiring fonly limited space, little feed and just enough care to afford pleasureable exercise.

These are the most richly colored of all the cochin bantams. The neck, the hens, when supplanted by younger birds, may be used for roasting or stewing.

The home flock bird should be an all-around fowl and these desired qualities are found in the heavier breeds, such as Plymouth Rocks, Wyandottes, Rhode Island Reds, Orpingtons, Light Brahmas and Sussex. All of these are hardy, stand confinement well, will lay during the coldest weather and mature early for their weight. There are many varieties that have one or more desirable qualities, and no one breed has all the good qualities of every other breed, but none is a better general purpose variety than those named. Their characteristics are much the same.

Plymouth Rocks mature early and produce brown eggs of good size. When properly grown and from a good strain they are beautiful birds. The amateur may have his choice as to color, as the varieties include the Barred, White, Buff, Silver Penciled, Partridge and Columbian. The Barred variety is most popular, and may be seen in largest numbers at the poultry shows.

Wyandottes weigh one pound less than Plymouth Rocks, generally mature a little earlier, and lay equally well, and make excellent broilers. Here, too, the beginner has a wide range for choice of colors and markings, there being White, Silver, Golden, Buff, Black, Partridge, Silver Penciled and Columbian Wyandottes. Rhode Island Reds are popular, and nearly everyone admires their deep, rich red plumage. They, too, are good layers of brown eggs during the winter months, make excellent broilers and roasters, and are hardy and vigorous.

The Orphysion has fine meat, with white skin. It is becoming more popular each year. Buffs, Black, White and Blue are the varieties to choose from, with the Buff and Whites most commonly grown.

Early hatched pullets are best, and these generally can be obtained from any reliable breeders. It is wise to purchase from one who has been in business for a number of years, and who has experience in growing and mating fowls for best results. The amateur who starts with a flock of pure-bred birds of the proper quality and gives them reasonable care cannot help but obtain results. This kind of stock will cost more than some of the so-called "bargains" sold at prices only a few cents above the wholesale market prices, but it will pay better in the end.

Late hatched pullets can always be bought in the Fall at a figure that appeals to the pocketbook, but they are costly in the end, for eggs will not be obtained—even with the best of care—until the pullets are older. It does not pay to keep pullets several months in the Fall or winter while waiting for eggs.

twice a day in covered drinking vessels.

If the poultry building is kept reasonably clean, if the fowls are kept free from lice, and if the owner selects a good pen of fully matured pullets from a breeder of known reliability, his opportunities to succeed are most favorable. The poor results with poultry that now and then are recorded should not be laid to the hen, but to poor stock or improper care.

Start in a small way. From twelve to twenty-four good pullets should give plenty of eggs for the family table and twenty-five to fifty should produce a surplus that may be sold to the neighbors at a good price.

How to Feed the Home Poultry Flock

Next week Professor Harry R. Lewis, of the New Jersey State Agricultural Experiment Stations, will give directions for feeding the home poultry flock. His article contains tested and proved formulas for dry mash and grain mixtures, which may be mixed at home. Professor Lewis also tells how to secure economically a winter's supply of green food. Watch for his article exclusively in the Telegraph next Saturday.

Light Brahmas are an old variety again beginning to boom. They are unusually large, but when properly cared for they are good layers of large brown eggs. While they do not mature as early as some other breeds, they are worthy of a place in the home flock.

Sussex are new to the American public, but have jumped into favor because of their utility qualities.
