the methods of "Billy" Sunday. During Sunday's month at Denver, Kimura attended every service, morning, noon and night. He did the same at Des Moines and Philadelphia, and lived for a time with the Sundays. In April of this year he took the Sunday idea back with him to Japan. But Kimura doesn't go the Sunday limit. He uses the simplest language possible, but even the strictest Methodist missionaries confess that they have never heard him speak vulgarly. "When I eat stewed cherries," he remarks, telling of Sunday's methods, "I don't have to eat the stones. I put them at the side of my plate and say nothing about them." Kimura crouches, kneels, leaps and swings when he preaches. And his audience sits bolt upright and listens hard. He stings the Christians into action. Then he goes after the non-Christians. He spares no one, and still he seems to have a great heart for everyone.

YUAN SHI KAI'S IDEALS What made little Japan bigger than big China?—Brain! The Chinese realize that fact. The President realizes it, and here are a few of the things he has to say in a long mandate on education. A country is like a family, he says, and "when a family becomes poor, its young members should more earnestly pursue their studies. So it is with a country. When it becomes poor and weak, its people should pay more attention to their education. "This country has experienced all sorts of insults and humiliations. Our people should repent of their folly of over-estimation and they should know it is a great disgrace for them to be ignorant and uneducated. "I, the President, being of the opinion that the promotion of education is the most important measure for adoption by this country, intend to prosecute this campaign without further delay or vacillation. A strong start has been made. Schools of every sort and description are in contemplation to have already been established. Scores of primary schools are being opened. An excellent School of Commerce and Finance has been started in Peking. Forestry, agriculture, industrial, naval and aviation schools are being enlarged, or new schools are being built. They have even started in Peking a school to train salt officials. And in Ciphai they have opened a school for grown-up nobles, ignorant left-overs of the old regime who are unable either to read or write the Chinese language; and a regulation has been passed to the effect that in the future no young heirs shall be permitted to inherit the titles of their predecessors unless they have completed a course in this school.—Willard Price in World Outlook for October.

according to cable dispatches received here from Honolulu, where they have been waiting for Mrs. Spreckels' decree to be made permanent. The final decree was drafted by attorneys here for both principals. After a brief conference with the presiding judge both attorneys agreed to the form of the decree which specifically stipulates that the filing of the final divorce papers shall not affect the agreement entered into by Mrs. Spreckels and his wife in December, 1913, to settle their property action. This settlement has not yet been effected. The two sons of the couple are with their grandfather, John D. Spreckels, Sr., at San Diego, and the little daughter is here with her father. No mention of the children was made in the interlocutory decree, granted August 22, 1914, and it is said that Mrs. Spreckels is satisfied with the present arrangement. FIRST GEOGRAPHICAL SOCIETY Caleb was the first member of a National Geographical Society. He went up, with eleven other heads of the children of Israel, from the wilderness of Paran to spy out the land of Canaan, whither the people of God were bound in their march across the desert. They returned after forty days, bringing with them the fruits of the land "flowing with milk and honey"—pomegranates and figs and grapes for the main valley of Eschol. They also brought back word of the inhabitants of the land, some of whom were "men of great stature." Caleb, the leader, was for going up at once and occupying the Promised Land, but the other members of the exploring party voted against him, frightening the people with the report of the obstacles. It was a backward step in a march that had been one of faith in the God of Israel, whose promise to his children of this land of Canaan had been plain and without regard to the difficulties. They lacked Caleb's courage; they lacked Caleb's faith. Every day is a day of choice. Every day is an advance or a retrogression. We never stand still. We are either like Caleb, looking with hopeful morning faces up toward the country of our highest dreams—the country of our highest hopes, or we are like the hesitant, fearful members of the early exploring band, scared by the obstacles and forgetting the night and the promise of Him who goes before us.—The Christian Herald.
