MINIATURE RUNABOUT BUILT FOR USE IN CITY STREETS

FOR USE IN CITY STREETS
What is without doubt the most curricus motor-driven vehicle that has yet made its appearance was recently demonstrated in the business streets of Baltimore, and is described, with illustration, in the October Popular Mechanics Magazine. It is a diminutive adaptation of the motorcycle and not a great deal larger in size than many of the manually propelled conveyances driven on city sidewalks by small boys. The device is designed not as a plaything, but as a quick, ready means of transportation. A compact 2½-horsepower motor, which drives the machine at a maximum speed of 25 miles an hour, is mounted at one side of the rear wheel. The fuel and oil tanks are embodied in the frame, and it is stated that one gallon fuel and oil tanks are embodied in the frame, and it is stated that one gallon of gasoline will carry the cycle approximately 75 miles. To prevent mud and water from splashing onto the rider, the wheels are nearly incased in specially shaped mudguards. The machine is 4 ft. in length, 18 in high, 9 in. wide, and weighs 45 lbs. It is equipped with a "kick starter" and is controlled in a novel way. By moving the handlebars forward the speed is increased, while by drawing them all of the way back the clutch is disengaged, the engine throttled, and the brakes applied.

BIG FARM-TRACTOR CONTEST HELD IN WHEAT BELIT

Nearly 100 farm tractors of different bodies and sizes were entered in a power plowing and cultivating contest which was held in Kansas soon after the wheat harvest. The meet took place on a 1,000-acre tract of land adjacent to Hutchinson, where separate plots were measured off for the demonstration of each machine. These spaces were allotted in accordance with the size and potential capacity of the various tractors. The exhibition, which was on a much broader scale than any previously held in the wheat belt, was attended by thousands of grain men and agriculturists of the Southwest. The October Popular Mechanics Magazine contains views of a number of the tractors which participated in the contest.
