SUSQUEHANNA RIVER BASIN WILL HAVE NO SUPERIOR ANYWHERE IN THE WORLD

City Planning Commission and Warren H. Manning Have Plan For Control of West Shore

When the City Planning Commission shall have completed its work, the Susquehanna River Basin will have no superior anywhere in the world. Warren H. Manning, the city's landscape adviser, is co-operating with the commission and recommends control in some amicable way of the west shore as well as the city frontage.

An examination was made of the western shore road by Mr. Manning and Mr. Herman, president of the Planning Commission because it was considered to be as important a feature of the basin as the easterly shore to those who use the water for recreation purposes. It was found that the old shore road extended from Wormleysburg near the shore line along the top of the bluff, up to a point opposite the center of McCormick's Island. From this point up to the point where the new road through Enola crosses the track by an overhead bridge to the south of the Rockville bridge this shore road has been obliterated, partly by railroad fill, down to the shore line. At no point, however, was it found impracticable to continue this road, along or near the shore, up to the road that leads along the shore to the Rockville bridge. The rights to such a road and to the shore to low water, Mr. Manning suggests, should be acquired from the railroad bridge below Wormleysburg to the existing road below the Rockville bridge. This would give a boundary to the Harrisburg river basin on the westerly side that would correspond to Front street on the easterly side. This basin properly extends from the Rockville bridge to the dam as these two structures represent the limits of practicable navigation for pleasure craft.

Looking to the future it was believed to be essential that there ultimately be established at or near Division street, a wharf similar to that proposed at Verbeke street, to take care of the traffic from the opposite side of the valley beyond Wildwood Park, when Division streets is carried over the Pennsylvania tracks, as proposed by the Commission.

To determine the cost of making the channel recommended along the easterly side of the river, more accurate information in the way of surveys must be secured, preferably from the State Water Supply Commission, who have a force of men especially trained for such work.

Landing For Large Boats There is to be a landing at Verbeke street for the Independence and Fairview ferries for the larger boats and incidentally for such coal handling as must, for the present, be carried on at that point. This dock would extend beyond the shore wall and steps to provide sufficient room for this business, and the entrance thereto would be carried under the shore walk, which would need to be raised over the road about a dozen feet.

A coal-handling plant is recommended at the Reading railroad bridge near Dock street, to be so constructed as to not permit teams to drive over the walk, and with an arch in the coal handling structure that could permit pedestrians to pass along the walk, under it, for its full width, without interruption. This coal handling plant, it is recommended should be handled by electricity in order to avoid all smoke. It is expected that the equipment at this point could be made sufficient to handle all the coal from the river basin at less cost than it could be handled from the surface at the wharves.

WHAT IS TAUGHT IN THE WHARTON SCHOOL'S EXTENSION COURSE

The Extension course of the Wharton School of Finance and Commerce is planned to give the student a comprehension of the facts and principles of business essential to every executive. The work is practical. It imparts this training in the shortest time and with the least possible effort. The course is given by the professors in charge of the same work in Philadelphia.

The Wharton School student learns to apply the principles of commercial law. He is taught the methods of scientific management, the principles of accounting, and the methods of financing corporations. He studies the methods by which business men borrow money; how to read credit statements, and what is good collateral. He is drilled in the principles of investment; the use of insurance, and the relative advantages of each type of policy. He studies productive advertising and selling methods. He becomes familiar with deeds, mortgages, and leases, and with the practical factors to be considered in judging real estate.

What do you know about such matters? Such knowledge is the indispensable equipment of a business executive.

Information, Registration and Consultation with members of the Faculty at Chamber of Commerce, Kunkel Bldg., every evening, except Saturday, 7 to 9, or with C. Harry Kain, Chr. Rotary Club Educational Committee, Arcade Bldg., 2 to 3 p. m.
