"THE ONLY GIRL" SEEN AT ORPHEUM

Victor Herbert Comic Opera
Has Attractive Music and Novel Presentation

A fair-sized audience witnessed the first of three performances in this city of Joe Weber's musical comedy, "The Only Girl." In this production Weber has proceeded along lines which are far from those prescribed for the average show of the musical comedy type, but in all, the deviations combine to present a musical comedy in a far more interesting manner than the old way. Audiences have become accustomed to musical comedies wherein have been no male choruses, but when Joe Weber started "The Only Girl" in a manner which strongly reminded one of a straight comedy he gave the unusual touch to his latest production. That the music is by Victor Herbert is a recommendation in itself for the piece. Attractive and pleasing, the music of "The Only Girl" in spots strongly reminds one of the work in one of his former successes, "The Reillys," the vehicle used by Montgomery and Stone some few years ago.

The "Only Girl" story hinges around four men who have always been the best of friends and upon the occasion of their meeting again three of them announce that they have found the only girl in the world for them, and against the advice of one of their number, Alan Kimbrough, announce their determination to marry. Concomitant bliss in a short space of six weeks gives place to unhappiness on the part of the three who have married, but this in no way deters Kimbrough from announcing his intention to marry "the only girl," who is his collaborator on the new opera he is producing.

The entire play in itself is clean and wholesome, but unobtrusively in several instances there has been introduced that disregard in the use of the names of the Deity with which the play could get along as well without. And once or twice the border of the vulgar was reached.

William Naughton as Alan Kimbrough and his three associates made up an excellent and both vocally and dramatically to Cedelia Novasio and her six associates must go the leading feminine honors. For Adele Hassan it must be said that she filled her role most capably, as did also Ellen and Lydia Crane. Helen Tyler was seen in the leading role.

BRINGING UP FATHER
Not even excepting the famous Flordora Sextette, has there ever been gathered together in one musical comedy company, such a galaxy of beautiful women, as is to be seen in Gus Hill's stage presentation of George McManus' newspaper cartoon play, "Bringing Up Father," which is scheduled for appearance at the Orpheum Saturday, matinee and night. The matchless beauty is augmented by costumes from the emporiums of Worth, of Paris. Harry G. H. of New York, who were given carte blanche to dress these women in the latest costume creations. The feature of the production is calculated to attract the women, and place before their eyes the latest sartorial wrinkles.—Advertisement.

MAJESTIC VAUDEVILLE
Just the kind of an act that Harrisburg likes is the act of Crawford and Broderick at the Majestic these days. It might be well to add that today is the last for its showing here, for the current bill leaves the Walnut street theater after its performance. Their repertory is the brightest ever and they have a couple little songs of their own that fit in their original style. Crawford and Broderick offer one of the splendid turns supporting "The Earl and the Girl," the little one-act musical comedy that contains many laughs, some new songs, fetching scenery, and a number of pretty girls. Ray and Hilliard, man and woman, presenting a unique comedy sketch called "Hello Sally," is another of the clever turns. The new bill that is booked to appear at the Majestic will be headed by Will Oakland and a comedy on Monday. The splendid vocal turn called "A Night at the Club." Mr. Oakland is the silver-voiced tenor of the Orpheum, who scored a tremendous hit at the Orpheum a season or two ago. His splendid bill will appear in support of Mr. Oakland's offering.—Advertisement.

PRACTICAL POST OFFICE METHODS

By Frederic J. Haskin

The postal service is virtually self-supporting, and therefore, when such things are effected, it becomes possible to give the people additional service. The administration of the Washington office having saved certain money through its reforms, exerted itself in working out schemes that would mean extra accommodations to the public.

Making New Business
There was the matter of listing the farmers of the community, and the prices they had for sale, and the prices they wanted for it. Washington was the first office to perform this service. By statements printed in newspapers and farm journals it was announced that the post office would make up such lists. Farmers were asked to send in their names, with itemized lists of their prices and produce. Great numbers of them did so. These lists were printed and made available to purchasers, and the result was an immediate increase in the volume of business thus transacted directly between the producer and the consumer. Before these lists were issued the Washington post office was handling 125 such parcel post packages a day. Soon this had been increased to 600 packages. There was built in the post office great ice box with 600 cubic feet of space for storing perishable goods that could not be delivered immediately.
But a no less important opportunity was given in developing parcel post business through the local merchants. The Washington office put one man out among the merchants and let him work constantly in explaining to them the possibilities of using this service. Other clerks were required to fill in spare time, expounding the detail. The post office went after parcel post

The Magic Power of the Wharton School

If you had Aladdin's lamp, and could by its magic power transplant the University of Pennsylvania to Harrisburg, would you attend the WHARTON SCHOOL OF FINANCE AND COMMERCE? "Yes," you answer, "if I could still keep my position."

Your dream has come true. The Wharton School is situated in Harrisburg. You can take exactly the same courses, given by the same professors, as in Philadelphia. You have personal instruction. You meet the teaching staff of the Wharton School face to face four times each week. You spend two hours each of these evenings in the study of practical business.

Training for business can rarely be secured by unguided individual study. The Wharton School believes real training can be secured only by the student and the teacher working out business problems together. The student's errors are checked up. He learns by practice. Proper methods of analysis and thought are thereby induced.

The keynote of the Extension Course of the WHARTON SCHOOL is personal instruction and face to face contact of student and teacher.

Take Lime For Tuberculosis

In the Journal of the American Medical Association (July 27, 1912, Page 308), Dr. C. F. Dicen, of Minneapolis, holds that a "deficiency of calcium" (lime) is responsible for the physical conditions which lead to tuberculosis, and that the therapy he advocates rests on this basis.
One of the reasons for the widespread success of Eckman's Alternative in the treatment of tuberculosis is its ability to supply this deficiency. It contains a lime salt in such combination with other valuable agents as to be easily assimilated by the average person. Many cases seem to have yielded to it.
We make no exaggerated claims for it, but prefer that it be tried on the same basis as any other prescription, and since it contains no opiates, narcotics or habit-forming drugs, it is safe. From your druggist or direct. Eckman Laboratories, Philadelphia.—Advertisement.
