Meantime Hernandez and his two companions, Ponto and the brute, waited with the patience of adventurers for the replying signal. They were anchored in a speedy motor boat in a small cove to the south of Seaport. Receiving no answer to their signal, they flashed another flare into the darkness. Once more they were-disappointed. Suddenly Hernandez sprang to the engine and turned it

"Steer an even course down shore," Hernandez cried to Ponto. "Keep out of the open. If they press us we can land and make a getaway.'

The commander of the destroyer glanced through his glasses.

"That's a bad crowd," he said, "a desperate bunch. Send up a gunner. I think I'll take a chance."

They sent up a gunner and he took chance. The bow of the motor boat flew into space. Hernandez and his gang were plunged into sea.

With one accord Hernandez and his two companions struck out for the

At the Hardin cottage, at the sound of the shot, Neal and Annette had rushed forth with Joe Welcher a close

"Come on, Joe," said Neal. "Stay where you are, Annette."

But Annette, always venturesome, insisted upon keeping them company. They had not gone twenty paces when something happened. There was a sudden rush from down the road and a man, his breath coming quick and fast, darted upon them, passed them, and was away in an instant. But in that instant he had accidentally or by design brushed violently against Anand knocked her down.

Neal raised her to her feet and then beside himself with anger dashed after this reckless individual up the road. "Look, look," cried Annette, is this thing coming here?"

This thing, as Annette called it, came on by leaps and bounds, with hands that wildly waved about its body and above its head as it sped along. It was a figure, gigantic, fearful. Welcher shuddered.

The huge creature stopped short in his tracks and stared at Annettestupefied and fascinated.

The sharp crack of revolver shots brought him to himself. He looked behind him. Annette following his gaze saw figures rushing up the roadway. The brute leaped up and with a huge bound rushed up the road and disappeared.

An officer followed by a handful of sailors from the launch followed the brute up the road.

CHAPTER X.

A General Jail Delivery. Meantime Neal, incensed at the as sault, either intended or accidental. upon Annette, was following his man across country. Hernandez was lean and agile and he kept well in the lead. At the railroad, obeying some sudden impulse, he turned and saving on down the tracks. Here he was at a disadvantage. Neal was accustomed to leaping railroad ties, two at a leap.

By this time, however, they had reached the bridge—a bridge over the inlet to the north of the town. Hernandez darted out upon it with Neal immediately behind him, but just as Neal was about to clutch him from behind, Hernandez twitched aside and leaped to the waters of the inlet far

Neal followed suit. Both men swam the first time that he was followed by one man and not two, now changed his tactics. He stood upon the shore and waited until Neal came up. Then with a sudden rush he darted forward and planted a murderous blow in the direction of Neal's chin.

When the blow was delivered Neal's chin was not there, nor was Neal, but he was not far away. He ducked and countered with his left, striking Hernandez full upon the throat.

At that instant something small and dark and fat leaped out of the darkness, drew a poniard, and before Neal could even turn, had cut a gashdeep gash-in Neal's shoulder

This new assailant was Ponto. And then all three heard a sound upon the bridge. All three looked up There in the moonlight, running full tilt toward them, was a squad of uni-

Ponto and Hernandez took to their heels and ran, but Neal in that instant leaped upon them from behind, clutched each man with one hand.

"Come on, boys," he yelled, panting,
"I've got them. Come." Meantime Mrs. Hardin had succeeded in getting Annette back into the cottage. Annette had been somewhat injured by the violence of her fall,

"It was that big wild man," she kept exclaiming, with terror shining from her eyes. "It was his face—his face." She looked up suddenly. "His face," she kept repeating. "Where have I seen his face before."

There was a tramp of feet without and in another instant a naval officer in uniform appeared in the doorway, removed his cap and entered.

Neal, pale-faced, but with flashing eyes, stalked in at his side. Annette uttered a cry of dismay. Neal's white shirt was drenched with blood.

Ten minutes later Hernandez and Ponto were safely under lock and key -the only prisoners in the town jail. Three hours later, just as the moon went down, a huge figure cautiously crept up toward the barred window of the jail. It lifted its hands high above its head, grasped the bars and drew itself up until it could peer within. "Break, brute," Hernandez com-manded softly. "Tear them up by the roots. Get us out of this." Five minutes later these three ill-assorted figures crept noiselessly, stealthily into the shadows of the night and disappeared.

On the day of the eruption of Mount Pelee Capt. John Hardin of the steamer Princess rescues five-year-old Annette Illington from an open boat, but is forced to leave behind her father and his companions. Illington is assaulted by Hernandez and Fonto in a vain attempt to get papers which lington has managed to send aboard the Princess with his daughter, papers proving his title to the lost 'sland of Cinnabar. Hington's injury causes 'his mind to become a blank. Thirteen years elapse. Hernandez, now an opium smuggler with Ponto and Inez, a female accomplice, and the mindless brute that once was Ilington, come to Seaport, where the widow of Captain Hardin is living with her son Neal and Annette Illington, and plot to steal the papers left to Annette by her father.

CHAPTER XI.

May the Best Man Win. Neal Hardin, clad in his life-saving uniform, sat upon the gunwale of his lifeboat, gazing seaward—ever seaward. He was seeing visions—always visions of the sea. He caught Annette's hand in his own. He turned to "Annette," he cried, "I've-got to do it—I can't help it. It calls to me—the sea. It's in my blood."

The girl smiled-a bit sadly perhaps. But her eyes glowed. She returned the pressure of Neal's hand with her warm, strong, girlish grasp.

"It's in your blood," she repeated, your father was a hero of the seahe saved me—you saved me, Neal. You've got to go."

"You-want me to?" he asked. "Yes, I want you to." "I'll go," said Neal.

The girl held in her right hand a newspaper-the current issue of the local Seaport weekly. "I saved this just for you. Look. Read it, Neal," she said. She pointed to an item on the first page.

NGRESSMAN PRIME A CONGRESSMAN NAPOLIS EXAMINATIONS.

Congressman James J. Prime of Sea port announces that the preliminary examination for candidacy for Annag olis finals will be held at the High School here on Thursday next at 9 a.m. The congressman's privilege is limited to but one appointment. May the best man win.

"It's your chance, Neal," said the girl. She placed a hand upon his shoulder, and at her touch the blood "You're the best man, Neal," she whispered, "always the best man, You're bound to win."

Congressman James J. Prime was a Seaport man-and the biggest man in that shore town. He had sprung from boatbuilding, seafaring ancestors; he knew seagoing folk; he liked them. And he liked the sea. And the pleasantest thing he did, he was wont to tell his friends, was to recommend clear-eyed, clean limbed young fellows for Annapolis. At the very time that Annette and Neal were sitting in the lifeboat gazing seaward, the congress man was at the post office, surrounde by a circle of old cronies, holding forth upon the navy. As he talked he examined his mail, opening it with a clumsy forefinger. He had mail aplenty -small envelopes and big ones, long and short. Three times he dropped a letter, once he dropped a check somebody picked them up for him.

opportunity to see Harrisburg's new home of the Stieff piano.

Scores of people braved the weather last evening to attend the formal opening and the entertainment provided more than repaid them. On the first floor a twelve-piece orchestra played oppular airs and classic selections while in the big concert hall on the third floor piano recitals were given by Lee Cronican, of Carlisle, and Newell Albright of this city. These features will be repeated to-night.

The store was prettlly decorated with potted plants and ferns and with numerous floral tributes sent to Mr. Sass by his many friends. One big basket of American beauty roses and chrysanthemums was the gift of the employes of the house.

The store was honored with the presence of Frederick P. Stieff, Sr. and Frederick P. Stieff, Sr. and Frederick P. Stieff, Sr. and frederick P. Stieff, Jr., of the home office at Baltimore. Other out-of-town guests included John Geigle, manager of the Scranton branch store and former sales manager of the local store, and Mr. Scarborough, the manager of the Stieff store at York.

Souvenir copies of Shakespeare's plays were presented to those who attended the event.

Words of admiration for the new piano house were heard on all sides last night. The building which is built of red brick with white sandstone trimmings is most beautifully finished in the interior with hardwood floors and mahogany woodwork. Walls of building gives an artistic background to the life of pianos. An open staircase leading from th top to bottom of the center of the building makes easy the transportation of playing from one building gives the store a very homelike touch.

A huge elevator rising through the center of the building makes easy the transportation of planos from one floor to another. The semiindirect system of lighting is used throughout the building and a private branch telephone exchange connects with all departments.

The first floor is devoted to plano display and the offices. The second floor includes the player-plano department and a ladies' rest room beautifully furnished. On the third floor are display parlors for grand planos and the big concert hall where frequent recitals will be given by the city's leading musicians. The basement is devoted to the sale of "used" planos and will be wnown as the "bargain basement."

8761 Child's Dress, 2 to 6 years.

Children's fashions are very fascinating this autumn. Here is a little dress that is confined by means of a belt, the skirt and body portion being cut in one and joined to the yoke with sleeves. There are the fewest possible seams to be sewed up and the least possible amount of work required for the making, yet the model is an exceedingly smart one. The front and lower edges are finished with hems and the beco ning collar can be made of the material as it is here or of embroidery, mitred at the corners. Since the sleeves make a part of the yoke, there are no armhole seams and the frock is an unusually comfortable one as well as an extremely fashionable one. The material illustrated is white cotton creps with ring dots of blue and the collar, cuffs and belt are of white linen. Both the fronts and the back are tucked at their upper edges, but if smocking is liked, the tucks could be omitted and smocking in either white or a color used in their stead.

For the 4 year size will be required 2% yds. of material 27 or 36 in. wide, 2 yds. 44, with 3% yd. 27 in. wide for collar, cuffs and belt.

The pattern No. 8761 is cut in sizes from 2 to 6 years. It will be mailed to

TAYLOR AT WORK ON PARK SLOPES

Outlines Energetic Tree-Planting Program and Filling in of Gullies

City Commissioner Taylor has made a thorough inspection of the park system since the celebration of last week, having been accompanied by the assistant superintendent, J. R. Hoffert, sistant superintendent, J. R. Hoffert, and City Forester Harry Mueller. This inspection was made with a view to an energetic tree-planting program this autumn and also with a view to protecting the river slope from the heavy rains of the winter. This will be done by filling in the deep gullies and removing the water outlets at different points along the bank which have been responsible for many of the more serious washouts. Of course, the present season has been most unusual for its heavy rainfalls and the character of the downpours. It is regarded as remarkable that the Department of Parks has been so successful in maintaining the new slopes and park areas. Commissioner Taylor has determined to grade the strip along the western curb line of Front street between Maclay and Division streets and continue the planting of the avenue of elms from Woodbine to the city boundary. A force of men has been employed during the last few days in filling out the depressions along the river front and placing the slope in as good shape as possible for the winter. It is expected that several hundred trees will be set out during the next month in all parts of the park system.
