Peace Not In Sight

"Kitchener said when the war started that it would last for at least three years, and from what I know of the situation over there I think he did not overestimate it," the traveloguer declared. "All talk of peace at the present time is premature, for the allies are in no position to consider proposals.

"The war, I believe, was inevitable. During my travels in Europe in the past eight or ten years—and I have been there at least once every year during that time—I have seen mitarism getting stronger and stronger, the distrust of the various powers, one for the other, getting keener and keener, until I knew that some little international incident like the one at Sarajevo would be the torch to set all Europe affame in war.

"On my screen I make no effort to show the horrible side of the war and as much as possible I refrain from picturing any scenes of actual fighting. I think that may well be left to the imagination. What I do try to show is the power of the various nations, by means of motion pictures and portray them in warlike mood, at the same time giving gilmpses of the cities, cultures and natural scenery. I have gotten up all my travelogues with the idea of making them interested in the war, emphasizing the traveling feature and making the nicture-tour as realistic as possible. The travelogues are in no sense picture from New York, where he has been from the proper of the parts of the man of the proper from New York, where he has been to the part of the parts of the man of the parts of the parts

You get the maximum use of a car in the Detroit Electric because your wife and daughter never have to depend upon the hired chauffeur nor wait until you can release yourself from business to drive them about. Remember—the resale value of every automobile is determined by its months of use more often than by its miles of use, therefore it is relatively the same whether the car has stood idle in front of your office or has been driven by the family during your business hours.
