BIG CROWDS SEE FIRST TRAVELOGUE

HARRISBURGERS' OPINIONS OF TELEGRAPH TRAVELOGUE

Prof. H. A. Surface (State Zoologist)—"The travelogues are decidedly educational and well worth everyone's time to attend. If one hasn't had the opportunity of traveling through Germany in person, Mr. Roberson's travelogue gives a very good idea of people and conditions there. I expect to see all the travelogues I can with my family. The series is a great thing for the educational uplift of the city and thanks is coming to the Telegraph for being responsible in bringing Mr. Roberson here."

J. S. Billing (State Public Service Commission)—"I was very much interested in Mr. Roberson's travelogue and enjoyed it. I expect to attend several others."

Rev. S. W. Herman—"I enjoyed the travelogue thoroughly. Its educational features were decidedly of value. The travelogue on a whole tended to promote neutrality in view of inculcating lessons showing the necessity of the United States preserving peace. If last night's subject is a sample, I recommend the travelogues heartily and advise all who can to attend."

Robert McFarland (Photographic expert of J. H. McFarland Co.)—"Mr. Roberson's pictures were splendid, particularly the ones shown at the last of Bavarian scenery. The moving pictures showed the German and Russian soldiers in a most realistic manner, bringing out vividly the horrible side of the war. On the whole the pictures—both dissolving and moving—were remarkable."

It was the first of the travelogues under the auspices of the Telegraph and the crowd was as representative as it was large. Class and mass were present and enjoyed equally the delightful and interesting screen journey over the fatherland.

Many people prominent in the affairs of the city were noticed in the audience. Enthusiasm at times ran riot. Those of German sympathy in the crowd warmed to the realistic pictures of troops marching, of scenes on the firing line, of the Kaiser resplendent in military garb, and the applause which followed drowned Roberson's voice in the din.

Roberson at his best. He kept things moving at a lively rate; pictures flashed on and off the screen, never reaching the point where they were the least bit tiring; merry quips and jests by and humorous stories of his own travels in Germany kept the audience laughing when it was not more seriously engaged in watching the warlike maneuvers of the Kaiser's fighting forces. And when it was all over and the house lights flashed on, the crowd continued for the moment to remain seated so that it was in vividness of the pictures and the reality of the tour which was unfolded before its eyes in the thousands of feet of motion pictures and hundreds of brightly colored views. The hour and three-quarters to most people passed like a third of that time.

True to all advance notices, Mr. Roberson had invited himself to picture Germany in a war-like mood. He took his Telegraph tourists out onto the firing line; he showed gigantic guns recoiling under the weight of explosion; he showed civilized men at the business of killing each other; their work and their pleasures at the front.

The human side as well as the spectacular was there, too, and Roberson showed a graveyard in a little Prussian town where soldiers and civilians who died together in keeping invaded back and forth by the German and Russian shells. He pictured the arrival of wounded from the front; showed them treated by Red Cross nurses and he showed great crowds of eager and kind-hearted Berlin anxiously watching war bulletins for news of brothers, fathers and sweethearts at the front. The word "war" took on a new meaning for all who sat before the pictures.

Great German Cities. War had its part; so did peace, and to many in the crowd the scenes of Germany in peace-time were much more attractive than the war scenes. All the large German cities were shown in passing, with typical glimpses of the life of each. Working southward in his journey, Roberson drew a continual round of exclamations from his audience with the exquisite beauty of his still pictures of the Bavarian highlands. One picture faded into another, each in passing seeming more beautiful than the one that preceded it until the audience was lost in a maze of loveliness.

And the talk along with the pictures was interesting, too. Roberson showed from the start that he wasn't ponderous of speech and his remarks followed one another crisply in a chatty conversational fashion, never tiring nor boring. He explained his pictures where explanation was needed, told of the things he had seen and done and painted a lively word-picture of Germany, its problems and possibilities.

Militarism Caused War. "The German people did not want this war," he said at one place in his talk. "It was forced on them by the European militarism which has had the continent in its grasp for years past." Applause greeted the statement.

"Germany" as a travelogue will be given again to-night for the advantage of those who did not attend as "first nighters." It will be the same pictures throughout. Roberson's limited stay in Harrisburg prevents many repetitions of the same subject, and to-night will be one of the last chances to see and hear this famous travelogue in one of the most powerful and popular of his offerings.

Belgium To-morrow. On Saturday evening "Belgium and Holland" is the subject, and as Roberson pointed out in prefacing his travelogue of last evening, it will be a sort of sequel to the preceding one inasmuch as the effectiveness and efficiency of German arms were shown first and result in the second. Belgium as it was before the war will be shown in color, views giving an accurate idea of the beauty and quiet peace of the land. Then glimpses will be given of the country as it is to-day, with the towns about which battles have raged—Liege, Namur, Ostend, Brussels and Antwerp. The tour will be completed in the quaintness of picturesque old Holland.

War Influencing Present Day Feminine Modes

New York, Oct. 29.—What will milady do if the Hottentots enter the great war? For be it known that the latest garments for women are being fashioned after the uniforms of the soldiers now fighting in Europe.

We have had the Belgian hat, and Mme. Frances Alda, the opera singer is introducing to New York the Bersagliero chapeau, which her husband brought back from Italy, and now the pretty Countess Tanesecco, wife of the famous aviator, has started Broadway with her novel Cossack costume and boots.

The gown is made of tete de negre velvet, trimmed with skunk fur and trimmed after the fashion of the czar's lashing horsemen. The skirt, quite full, reaches barely below the knees—and encasing the legs from the knees down were boots of the softest kid, laced on the outside.

A sensation? Yes, but that does not worry the Countess, who before her marriage to the noble aviator, who is said to be worth about four million dollars, was a dancer of international reputation.

Nish Is Threatened by Advance of Bulgarians

London, Oct. 29, 12.18 P. M.—The first phase of the Austrian-German-Bulgarian campaign in Serbia is completed. Not only have the invaders of Serbia realized the important objective of joining hands in the northeastern corner of the country, they have enhanced this military advantage by procuring free passage down the Danube.

The progress of Bulgarian troops east and northeast of Nish both threatens the city and places the Serbian army in a position of increased danger. Moreover like the union of Bulgarian and Teutonic armies further north, the capture of Nish would have more than mere military or strategic advantage since it would make possible rapid establishment of railway communication through Belgrade, Nish and Sofia, among Austria, Germany and their allies.

DISCUSS STATE ST. SUBWAY PLAN

(Continued From First Page.) Problem is clearly set forth by Edward S. Herman, president of the commission, to-day in a brief statement. President Herman explained the commission's view to be a direct answer to the statement of the Walnut street bridge backers yesterday. The statement follows:

"Considerable misunderstanding by the friends of the Walnut street viaduct about the position or attitude of the City Planning Commission appears to exist. The commission has never been opposed to the viaduct. Our objection has been based entirely upon location. We firmly believe that State street is the proper place to erect the connecting link between the Hill section and West Fairview."

"Our thought for the welfare of the Hill section is fully demonstrated by analyzing our first report to Council. The elimination of grade crossing at Pine street should be considered and will prove a great benefit to the businessmen all over the Hill in general, and to the southern section in particular. The widening of the Market street subway will be a direct benefit to the central portion, and the placing of a subway or viaduct at State street will, in our judgment, provide the proper plan and means for traffic of that section."

"After reading the statement of the Walnut Street Viaduct Association, it is clear that the City Planning commission and the bridge association agree upon all points except location and probable cost. In the latter connection it may be noted that the statement carefully refrains from mentioning the approximate cost of the viaduct. The question of either a subway or a viaduct at State street is not a matter of the distant future, it is a matter of the immediate future and it is safe to assume that definite action in this respect must be taken in view of the development of the park extension zone and the plans of the State street widening. These matters are not problems that can be gauged by months so far as time is concerned; however, it must not be forgotten that Harrisburg has made many wonderful improvements in a little less than fifteen years and these improvements involved the expenditure of millions of dollars. Is it reasonable to expect that the proposed improvement will drag along over anything like an indefinite period under these circumstances?"

Reasons For Opposition

"The Planning commission does not want to deny to the Hill any additional facilities; in fact, feels that the facilities should be increased; at the same time, we feel that Walnut street is the axis of the park extension for the following reasons:

"First. It is too close to Market street, where, of necessity, a reconstructed subway must be carried through.

"Second. It will prevent the widening of Walnut street to 105 feet, since there will be no incentive to improve this street by adding additional space when the widened street will lead into a narrow viaduct.

"Third. The cost of constructing a viaduct or subway at State street, which in our opinion, is more desirable, would in the item of consequential damages be very considerably less.

"Fourth. We are convinced that State street is the logical location, and while a subway was suggested by the commission, if a bridge is better from a practical or engineering standpoint, we certainly would favor a bridge. Another reason for State street is that State street is the axis of the park system, and eventually will be the great boulevard to the East, while Walnut street will be the same width that it is at the present time, and traffic would be diverted from the big wide State street on to Thirteenth street, and thence into Walnut.

"Fifth. We must bear in mind that the Capitol Park Extension will, when completed, entirely change the character of this locality. It will become a thoroughfare in all that the word implies.

Picturesque Picture of Serbian Crown Prince in the Field

This interesting and picturesque photograph of the Serbian Crown Prince Alexander was made in the hills back of Belgrade, where the Serbians put up a strong resistance to the Teutonic invaders. Since the outbreak of the war, the Crown Prince has led his men in the field, being often exposed to shell fire and twice slightly wounded. He is considered a remarkable military genius and it was due to him, more than to anything else that the first Austrian invasion of Serbia ended in disaster for the invaders.
